Rota, Tinian pushed as 'divert airfields'

Senate President Paul A. Manglona (Ind-Rota) and Senate Vice President Jude U. Hofschneider (R-Tinian) separately recommended the use of Rota or Tinian, respectively, as an alternative site for a U.S. Air Force airfield to help support not only the military but also the civilian community.

For some CNMI Republican Party lawmakers and supporters, Gov. Benigno R. Fitial, who left the GOP in 2001 to form a new party for his gubernatorial bid, "should not be made to lead the same party he had betrayed."

House minority leader Joseph

Deleon Guerrero (R-Saipan) said yesterday that instead of strengthening the GOP, Fitial essentially chased out those who have been loyal to the Republican Party.

"Did he bring in more or chased out more? Is GOP really gaining? I feel betrayed, and I am not the only one. Our

'We're paying out much, much more than what's being received'

By CLARISSA V. DAVID
clarissa_david@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

The NMI Retirement Fund is able to meet only half of the recommended 60.9 percent contribution rate, a problem that has built up over the years, according to administrator Richard Villagomez.

"You're not getting enough money to support the system and we're paying out much, much more than what's being received," Villagomez said at the Rotary Club of Saipan general membership meeting at the Hyatt Regency yesterday.

Given the "significant gap" between what the system requires against what is actually being contributed, Villagomez warned that the Fund will soon run out of money if it does not receive additional contributions.

Comparing the Fund's status to other Micronesian islands, Villagomez said that Palau has a 26.8 percent recommended contribution rate versus its 6 percent actual contribution rate, while the neighboring island of Guam has a recommended contribution rate of 24.8 percent versus its actual contribution rate of 21.5 percent.

The administrator cited two "big factors" in the difference between the CNMI's and Guam's recommended contribution rates: covered payroll and increase in liabilities.

According to Villagomez, covered payroll refers to members of the defined benefit requirement plan that was closed out when the law that created the defined contribution plan was enacted. "So the number of people or members of the defined benefit plan will continue to shrink as people retire, refund, or move on," he said.

As people retire, Villagomez said the Fund incurs more liabilities, causing them to pay out more. "It's actually a combination of those two factors that really push off our percentage to 60.9 percent," he added.

When asked whether the high recommended contribution rate is also brought by the Fund's generosity in giving benefits, Villagomez replied, "Yes, that could be a contributing factor."

Restructuring benefits

Based on a report by former Fund consultant Wilshire Consulting, Villagomez said the restructuring of retiree benefits is the "only choice" to lengthen the life of the Fund, which they expect to run out of money "in about two and a half years based on the current trend."

Villagomez said the Fund currently issues checks to some 2,800 beneficiaries.

While there are other solutions available to restore the Fund's solvency like plan assets and future returns as well as future contributions, Villagomez noted that the probability of these two options happening is either "zero" or "close to zero."

"The immediate solution for now, at least to buy time, is to restructure the benefits," said Villagomez, who added but did not elaborate that there are legal and constitutional issues to this solution.

$63 million payout

Citing unaudited figures, Villagomez disclosed that the estimated benefits the Fund paid out last year was $63 million. Of this amount, about $53 million was spent in the CNMI, which is 5.5 percent of the Commonwealth's reported gross domestic product of $962 million in 2009.

"In two and a half years, when we stop paying pensions or not able to pay pensions, we're looking at estimating about 10 percent of consumer spending to be taken out or cease to exist in the economy," added Villagomez.

4 firms interested in Fund's investment consultant job

By MONETH G. DEPOSA
moneth_deposa@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

Four off-island companies have expressed interest in becoming the NMI Retirement Fund's next investment consultant.

Administrator Richard Villagomez said yesterday that these four firms responded to the Fund's announcement and have already turned in their proposals. He declined to name the proposers.

The Fund's last investment consultant, Wilshire Consulting, terminated its contract after only a year following the signing into law of the Beneficiaries' Derivative Act, which allows retirees to sue the Fund's money managers.

Without an investment consultant, the Fund board is stymied from making decisions on its investments. As a temporary measure, the board decided to liquidate all of the Fund's investments and move them to CDARS, or certificate of deposit account registry service.

During yesterday's meeting at the Saipan Rotary Club, Villagomez was told about a company that wants to service the Fund and may submit a proposal with the condition that it would only take effect if the Beneficiaries Derivative Act is repealed.

Villagomez said that the Fund cannot consider that proposal "responsive" because the agency has no control over the Legislature. "How fast [the repeal] happens, only time will tell."

A bill proposing to repeal the Act is now pending at the Legislature.

As of Oct. 25, the Fund's portfolio was valued at $264,497,211. Villagomez disclosed that some Fund monies are still in mutual funds, while some ($134.2 million) are in cash.

Villagomez said it is the intention of the Fund to move to the CDARS program as quickly as possible and are now finalizing the paperwork. However, all these processes may be stopped, he said, depending on the recommendation of any new consultant the Fund hires.

The team is here to validate the contents of the report the college submitted to the commission on Oct. 15 as a requirement to address its probation status.

Saipan Tribune learned that

The event will be a good venue to buy used books, toys, electronics, furniture, clothes, shoes, baby gear, and other items for sale, all of which are donated by students and parents from both schools. Pastries and coffee will also be on sale at the event.

Sikkil said the two schools will divide the proceeds, with their school using the funds to update its playground. (Clarissa V. David) the group has been meeting since Monday with NMC president Sharon Hart and her management team, which assists the members in their campus inspection. The group also had a series of meetings with students and employees, it was learned.

Today, the team is expected to meet with the Board of Regents at 10am.

Regents chair Juan Lizama refused to comment on the team's visit, citing the commission's confidentiality rule.

The college, in a statement to Saipan Tribune, declined to confirm the visiting group's schedule.

"Due to ACCJC's Policy on Public Disclosure, NMC must maintain an appropriate level of confidentiality with ACCJC at this juncture in the accreditation process. As such, NMC is unable to provide any further details about the visiting team," the NMC statement reads.

It said that the college will make the visiting team report and other accreditation documents accessible on the NMC website once the commission indicates that it is appropriate to do so.

NMC's report on Oct. 15 builds upon the information the institution submitted in prior months. This report presents evidence of its continuing and sustainable efforts to comply with accrediting requirements and standards.

Tinian delegation begins work on 2012 budget; OKs 2 bills

By HAIDEE V. EUGENIO
haidEE_eugenio@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

Tinian Mayor Ramon Dela Cruz zeroed out funding for the Tinian Casino Gaming Control Commission and asked for more than $580,000 for the Office of the Mayor in his proposed fiscal year 2012 budget of some $2 million. But Tinian Legislative Delegation chair Sen. Jude Hofschneider (R-Tinian) said yesterday the panel will decide on the island's budget after affected agencies are heard.

Dela Cruz, in his letter to the delegation, believes that the commission will submit their 2012 budget request and revenue projection directly to the delegation and the Tinian Municipal Council.

The Tinian delegation discussed briefly the island's 2012 budget during yesterday's session wherein they also passed two local bills now headed for Gov. Benigno R. Fitial's desk.

But the lawmakers decided to hold off further discussion on the budget until after a meeting on Tinian on Thursday.

Acting Tinian Casino Gaming Control Commission chair Ignacio Quichocho did not want to comment yesterday on the mayor's budget plan.

Dela Cruz said a substantial amount of his proposed budget will be used to pay outstanding debt. These include payments to the NMI Retirement Fund, vendors and retroactive salaries. The budget request also includes funding for the Tinian Municipal Scholarship and medical referral.

"Both programs experienced funding shortfalls in 2011 and will require a more consistent funding source to ensure its sustainability," Dela Cruz said. "Finally, it is also imperative that funds be available for operations to subsidize our departments in the event that the CNMI budget allotments are reduced."

During yesterday's session, the delegation passed Rep. Trenton Conner's (R-Tinian) House Local Bill 17-46, with amendment.

Conner's bill appropriates $35,000 from the developer infrastructure tax collected on Tinian for the use of the Department of Public Works to repair the "unpaved and frequently used roads in Marpo Heights, Marpo Heights 2 and Carolinas."

The delegation also passed Conner's HLB 17-59, appropriating $41,813 from poker and pachinko slot machines' local license fees for Tinian patients and school expenses.

Of the total amount, $27,000 is appropriated for certain Tinian patients' monthly subsistence allowance, and $14,813 for Tinian Elementary School for expenses related to a Chamorro Language Competition held in Guam.

ROTA

The senators' letters were in response to the U.S. Air Force's request for comments on its preparation of an environmental impact statement related to developing a "divert airfield alternative location to Andersen Air Force Base."

The planned airfield would be used as an alternative landing site that will support joint military training and exercises and humanitarian relief operations.

Manglona, in a Nov. 7 letter to U.S. Air Force Capt. Kimberly Bender, said he is "strongly recommending" the CNMI, specifically "Rota" as an alternative site.

Hofschneider, in an interview, said he also sent a letter recommending Tinian as an alternative, citing the U.S. Department of Defense's 99-year lease of two-thirds of land on Tinian.

"There's runway that is readily available but will need a little rehabilitation, and it is only fitting...because it is strategically located as we do also have our harbor that may be significant to the military realignment in the Pacific," he said.

Hofschneider, chair of the Tinian Legislative Delegation, said funding requirement may be significantly lower for Tinian compared to those of other islands because of the infrastructure that is partially ready.

Manglona, in his letter, said that Rota is the southernmost island in the CNMI chain of islands, and its airport has the closest airfield to Guam's Andersen Air Force Base.

"The airport's limited flight schedule also satisfies the United States Air Force's need for any unscheduled landings. Moreover, Rota has large amounts of readily available land. Specifically, the Rota Airport is surrounded by undeveloped land, away from any cultural artifacts, and perfect for housing and development," Manglona said.

He assured that the Rota community will welcome the military and humanitarian missions of the U.S. Air Force.

Manglona said Rota also has a capable workforce and the increased military presence, if any, would be a great help to the island's economy and its people, "who have greatly suffered since the recent economic downfall."

"Based on the foregoing, I respectfully submit that Rota is unique in its ability to support the strategic requirements of U.S. Forces around the globe, including humanitarian airlifts during natural disasters and the USAF's readiness mandate for forward-deployed forces in the western Pacific. Additionally, Rota is surrounded by neighboring islands that are also unique, providing the Air Force with a variety of locations to choose from. Regardless of its final decision, I offer my full support for the USAF's proposed action in the CNMI," he added.

The U.S. Air Force held open house scoping meetings in October on Saipan, Tinian and Rota on the matter. The meetings were held to support an early and open process for determining the scope of issues to be addressed, and for identifying the significant issues related to the preparation of an EIS "aimed at assessing the potential environmental impacts from proposed development of divert capabilities within the Mariana Islands."

Scoping meetings helped inform the public of the proposed action and National Environmental Policy Act process and give residents an opportunity to submit written and oral comments on the scope, environmental resources, and local issues to be addressed in the EIS.

GOP

supporters also feel betrayed by party officials," Deleon Guerrero said.

He questioned how Fitial and his core group could promote unity when they failed to give courtesy to Republican incumbents about a meeting and amendments to bylaws.

Deleon Guerrero, a longtime Republican, likened Fitial to a military leader who betrayed and abandoned his troops, only to lead them again.

Rep. Ray Tebuteb (R-Saipan) said yesterday that Fitial's betrayal of the party he's now leading is disenfranchising a lot of loyal party members and supporters.

"Betray me once, shame on you. Betray me twice, shame on me," he said.

For those silent Republicans who share his sentiments, Tebuteb said he wishes that "they would at least state their point, whatever they feel."

Deleon Guerrero said "it's time to be brutally honest about what's happening."

He said he will serve his current term as a Republican and serve his precinct and the CNMI, but in the next election, he "may" run as an independent.

Just like the others, Tebuteb and Deleon Guerrero expressed disappointment with those who organized Saturday's meeting for not inviting incumbents and all party officials to the supposedly party meeting and for failing to inform them about changes to the party's bylaws.

They said the changes included lifting a prohibition on sitting elected officials from becoming party president, hence allowing Fitial to become president.

Tebuteb reiterated that he's still a Republican, but a lot of things can happen between now and the next election.

Former Republican Party president Juan I. Tenorio, when asked for comment yesterday, said he's not surprised about the selection of Fitial as new party president, and thinks that it was "orchestrated." Tenorio had been a loyal Republican for some 40 years.

"They came with unnecessary amendments without first presenting all the recommended amendments to the whole executive committee to debate and discuss those items, and then present those to the general membership," he said.

Tenorio reiterated that he has quit politics, but shared his personal opinion about Saturday's surprise selection of Fitial as party president. GOP president Juan N. Babauta had stepped down to devote his time to being the chief executive officer of the new Commonwealth Healthcare Corp.

Babauta was Fitial's opponent during the past two gubernatorial elections. Fitial later made Babauta one of his special advisers under a $1-a-year contract.

On the other hand, Tenorio said he does not doubt that Fitial's relationship with members of the Republican National Committee will help advance the CNMI and the party's interests in the nation's capital. Tenorio was the president when Fitial was re-accepted into the GOP in January. Tenorio quit the party and politics in July.

Of all Republican lawmakers, only Senate Vice President Jude Hofschneider (R-Tinian) was invited to the Saturday meeting.

Rep. Joseph Palacios (R-Saipan) said yesterday he's surprised when he read in the news that there was a Saturday meeting.

"They knew where to find me and the other lawmakers. ...I was wondering whether I was ousted from the party. They should have at least given us the courtesy to be informed about the meeting and the changes to the bylaws," said Palacios, a long-time Republican.

Palacios said he is leaning toward not seeking re-election, when asked whether he would still run under the Republican Party.

Rep. Ray Yumul (R-Saipan) and Sen. Ralph Torres (R-Saipan) also said they were not aware of the Republican meeting during the weekend and the changes to the bylaws.

Rep. Stanley Torres (Ind-Saipan) said yesterday he has not considered rejoining the Republican Party just because Fitial is now its president.

Fitial founded and headed the CNMI Republican Party until he formed his own Covenant Party for his gubernatorial bids in 2001 and 2005. Babauta ran against Fitial in these two elections. Fitial was re-accepted to the Republican Party early this year, and called on other Covenant Party members to follow him. Lt. Gov. Eloy S. Inos and other Covenant members remain with the Covenant Party.

of some retirees is the highest paid by the Fund, while minimum pension benefit amounts to only $6,000 a year.

Surprised by the huge amounts provided to some retirees, Rotary members sought an explanation as to how the Fund came up with the amounts.

"On an annual basis, the smallest pension is $6,000 because that's the minimum set by the law while the highest pension is close to $100,000, if not more. How to qualify for this $100,000 pension? Well, the basic calculation is your pension base is about 50 percent of what your earnings are," he explained.

Obviously, he said, a member should be earning a lot more than $100,000 to receive that amount of pension. But because there are no government jobs in the Commonwealth that pay $200,000, Villagomez said that the pension benefit continues to increase every year due to the compounding effect of COLA.

"This means if they are retirees for 15 years or 20 years, the COLA were added every year to their pension base," he said.

Saipan Tribune learned that among retirees who get high pension checks are retired judges and justices and retired government officials.

Although the Legislature has repealed the COLA law, it still requires the Fund board to vote every year whether to provide COLA or an annual retirement bonus to members every year.

In fiscal year 2011, the board approved to give out an annual bonus because it has no compounding effect on the base pension of members.

Fund board chair Sixto Igisomar earlier said that the only time the Fund can provide additional benefits is when the pension plans' funding level is at 80 to 100 percent. At present, the Fund's $264 million portfolio represents a funding level of just 38 percent, he said.

Igisomar said the Fund wants to eliminate the distribution of any of the two. "Whatever you call it—COLA or bonus—we are trying to stay away from it because the only time we will be heading toward COLA or bonus is if we actually hit the 80 to 100 percent funding level and we're not," he told Saipan Tribune.

LAWYER

Mun Su Park.

"It's a very important issue—due process," Park told Saipan Tribune.

Park disclosed that a DHS investigator informed him yesterday morning that the removal proceeding has been opened and that a $5,000 bond is set for Macaraeg's temporary release.

The lawyer said he will see Macaraeg at the Department of Corrections today, Wednesday, to discuss the bail and see if they can ask the Immigration Court to reduce the amount.

Park said they were able to stop Macaraeg's deportation after they filed the emergency motion to reopen proceedings and rescind the in absentia order of removal entered on Oct. 4, 2011.

Park also filed a motion for automatic stay of removal/deportation.

Records indicate that Park's law office filed the motions on Oct. 31, 2011.

Rene Reyes, founding president of the Marianas Advocates for Humanitarian Affairs Ltd. or MAHAL, told Saipan Tribune on Friday that Immigration and Customs agents had informed Macaraeg that he would be deported on Monday, Nov. 7.

Reyes said he went to the Department of Corrections Monday night and saw that Macaraeg had not been deported.

ICE agents arrested Macaraeg last month when he did not appear at his immigration hearing due to confusion about his hearing date.

In an earlier visit to the facility, Reyes found Macaraeg in a wheelchair as his legs were swelling due to arthritis.

In the motions, Park said that, on Aug. 16, 2011, Macaraeg was served with a written notice of a hearing that clearly set it for Oct. 9, 2011, at 10am.

Oct. 9 falls on a Sunday and the following day, Oct. 10, is also a non-working federal holiday.

Nonetheless, Park said, Macaraeg, accompanied by a friend (Reyes) went back the next day, Oct. 11, to the court for the same purpose of verifying his hearing date.

"It was then that they found out from an immigration court employee that the court conducted the hearing on the respondent's case on Oct. 4, 2011, and not Oct. 9, 2011, as shown in the hearing notice dated Aug. 16, 2011," Park said.

Park said the court employee insisted that Macaraeg's hearing date was Oct. 4, 2011.

Saipan Tribune inspected the hearing notice yesterday and saw that the number looks like a 4 or a 9 as it was handwritten.

"The court's written notice sets out a wrong date to the detriment of respondent, whose only fault is to rely and believe that that the court's written notice is correct," Park said.

Among the grounds cited for removal was that Macaraeg is jobless and has no umbrella permit.

Reyes said that Macaraeg was among the 628 aliens who were granted conditional umbrella permits.

Judge orders detention of ex-CRM official Pangelinan

U.S. District Court for the NMI Chief Judge Ramona V. Manglona granted yesterday the U.S. government's motion to detain former Coastal Resources Management official Benny K. Pangelinan pending a revocation hearing of his supervised release.

Manglona set the revocation hearing for Nov. 28, 2011.

The U.S. Probation Office has filed a petition to revoke Pangelinan's supervised release after he allegedly violated his probation conditions.

At yesterday's hearing, Pangelinan appeared with court-appointed counsel, Joseph N. Camacho. Assistant U.S. attorney Garth Backe appeared for the U.S. government.

Manglona said that Pangelinan would be appointed a new counsel. Camacho had moved to withdraw from the case and had asked that attorney Michael Evangelista be named to represent Pangelinan.

Backe asked the court for Pangelinan to be detained pending his Nov. 28 revocation hearing, calling to the witness stand U.S. Probation Officer Gregory Arriola, who narrated how Pangelinan violated his supervised release conditions.

In the petition for revocation filed in September, Arriola said that Pangelinan borrowed $21,450 from a couple and received over $11,000 from a family member, with promises to pay them back with large amounts of interest.

He allegedly promised the couple that he will double the payoff once he receives $9.9 million from a "Korean woman" who had $150 million to use for projects on Saipan. Pangelinan also allegedly convinced a family member that he has large sums of money being sent to Saipan from different sources.

Last Wednesday, Arriola filed a supplemental declaration that he caught Pangelinan sending money through wire to a person he claimed to be his Australian girlfriend whom he met on the Internet.

In January 2007, a federal jury found Pangelinan guilty of five wire fraud charges stemming from his activities to defraud potential investors and his involvement with various Internet fraud schemes.

He was sentenced to three years and one month in prison. After serving his sentence, he was placed on three years of supervised release.

The court had also ordered Pangelinan to pay a total of $129,250 in restitution to his five victims. (Ferdie de la Torre)

Clothing storeowner, insurance company settles attorney's fee

The owner of a clothing store in Garapan that burned down last year has settled the insurance company's attorney's fees.

Attorney Ramon K. Quichoch, counsel for Zheng Rui Brother Corp., notified the U.S. District Court for the NMI on Monday about the settlement they reached with FirstNet Insurance Co.

Last month, U.S. District Court for the NMI Chief Judge Ramona V. Manglona found Zheng Rui Brother Corp. liable to pay FirstNet Insurance Co. for the costs of filing a motion to compel Zheng Rui Brother to produce requested documents.

In granting FirstNet Insurance Co.'s motion to compel discovery, Manglona determined that FirstNet complied with the requirement of federal and local procedure rules to confer in good faith to obtain discovery without court action.

Manglona found that Zhen Rui Brother Corp. is liable to pay FirstNet with its costs in filing the motion.

Attorney Richard W. Pierce, counsel for FirstNet, said that 6,799 hours were spent in filing the motion to compel, costing $1,427.79.

On Oct. 30, 2010, a fire broke out at the BL Clothing Store owned by Zhen Rui Brother Corp.

In March 2011, the fire policy insurer, FirstNet, through counsel Richard W. Pierce, sued Zhen Rui Brother Corp. for allegedly deliberately setting off the fire so that the owner could claim $404,718.53 in insurance.

Zhen Rui Brother Corp later filed a counterclaim against

FirstNet, alleging breach of contract, breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, insurance bad faith, and unfair or deceptive business practices. (Ferdie de la Torre)

Ethnic rioting in Papua New Guinea leaves 6 dead

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP)—Rioters have burned down the homes of thousands of people in an ethnic clash in Papua New Guinea's second-largest city, killing at least six people, leaving thousands homeless and turning the city of Lae eerily silent.

Dominic Evere, a government research officer, told The Associated Press on Tuesday that the rioting began Thursday and was sparked by the alleged rape of a young woman. He said locals burned down the homes of people who moved into the city of about 190,000 from the highlands of the Pacific island nation.

"The young people got organized after the young lady got raped in broad daylight," Evere said. "They said, 'Enough is enough.'"

Evere said it took until Sunday for police to restore an uneasy calm, after 100 extra officers were brought in from the capital, Port Moresby, and the highlands to help local forces. The Papua New Guinea Post-Courier described Lae as a "ghost town" following the riots.

The port town of Lae is an important industrial hub in a country where mining is booming but unemployment and crime remain high. Evere said tensions there had been building for months as more job seekers poured into the city and lawlessness increased.

Evere said that aside from those killed, 26 people were injured in the rioting, with some suffering gunshot wounds. He said the situation remained "very, very tense" but that the ethnic groups were trying to negotiate a peaceful resolution.

The Post-Courier reported that Prime Minister Peter O'Neill is calling on Lae's community and ethnic leaders to help return the city to normal as soon as possible.

Mendiola is Sinapalo Elementary's most outstanding teacher

By MONETH G. DEPOSA
moneth_deposa@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

Sixth-grade teacher Annalee Mendiola was adjudged most outstanding educator of Sinapalo Elementary School this school year and was bestowed the prestigious Teacher of the Year award.

Mendiola has been serving the school system for 11 years now and has been nominated for the award four times. This is her first time to actually bag the honor.

"I am pleased and proud that all the hard work I've done for our future generation and to our community was commended," she told Saipan Tribune, adding that it is always a great opportunity to guide children in the right direction.

Annalee Mendiola
Teacher of the Year

Mendiola finds teaching challenging but also personally rewarding. "I know that every teacher has strengths and weaknesses, but because of my willingness to build upon my strength and work on my weaknesses, I am learning and progressing. I think the greatest success I bring to the classroom is my enthusiasm to teach as well as to learn from my students. I believe that my vital role as a teacher is to persuade my students that the knowledge and skills we're learning is valuable and worth learning," she said.

Riza Jingco
Maintenance of the Year

Involvement, she said, is one of her mottos. Asking questions during the delivery of her lessons, she said, is a good strategy that helps students be more effective communicators and problem solvers. It is also one way to get students actively engaged.

"With my 11 years in Sinapalo Elementary School, I have learned a lot about teaching. I have learned the importance of explaining my objectives, my teaching methods and strategies, providing overview and context to the students. I do believe that a student-centered classroom allows students to apply knowledge in a permanent, long lasting way," said Mendiola.

For her, children must be accepted, nurtured and educated regardless of ability, background, or diversity. "We must also consider that every individual is unique. Children learn differently. In my classroom I offer different assessments to appreciate each of my student's uniqueness and abilities. I use rubrics, checklists, portfolios and presentations to assess my students' progress," she said.

Mendiola said her father, an educator himself, greatly inspired her. Her father used to tell her: "No other profession could change and mold the life of our future generations, beside a teacher."

She finds fulfillment whenever she meets former students who thank her for being an instrument in their lives. Teaching, she said, is not a profession that you should like but one that you must love, embrace, and have passion for.

Other awardees

Rebecca Cuevas, a Sinapalo Elementary employee for three years now, has been named the school's Teacher Aide of the Year.

Cuevas handles the Chamorro Carolinian Language Heritage Studies program and participates in extracurricular activities, field trips, and community events. She has chaired and co-chaired numerous clubs and activities and her love for traditional music, dance, arts, and craft has made her class fun and exciting.

Hailed Support Staff of the Year is Demy Catubay, the school's administrative specialist for more than seven years now. He was recognized for his outstanding work ethic, great leadership, and dependability. He has been involved in many school extracurricular activities such as the student council, Tween Talk, and presently co-chairs the accreditation team. Catubay, who has an associate degree in liberal arts, is currently studying for a bachelor's degree in information technology with emphasis in networking and telecommunication.

Also recognized is Riza Jingco, the school's Maintenance of the Year awardee. According to the school, Jingco keeps the school clean and inviting. She was described as well-organized, diligent in her work, approachable, and punctual.

Rotary gears up for annual lunch with man'amko

The Rotary Club of Saipan is gearing up for its annual Thanksgiving luncheon for the senior citizens.

"I know that this is a very important event and I need everybody's participation," Rotary treasurer Richard Cody said during the club's general membership meeting at the Hyatt Regency Saipan yesterday.

cations workshop being hosted by the Department of Public Works at the Fiesta Resort and Spa in Garapan.

Some 15 DPW, Department of Lands and Natural Resource-es, and Department of Public Lands staffers attended the first day of the event, which aims to review the islands' first ever Right-of-Way Manual.

The first day featured pre-

Cody said he has spoken to Aging Office director Rose Mondala who expressed hope that the annual luncheon for the man'amko will push through.

Cody said they plan to hold the luncheon two days before Thanksgiving or on Nov. 22.

Although there are several Rotarians who will be off-island for the holiday, Cody nevertheless encouraged other members to take part in the planning and actual luncheon.

The Rotary Club of Saipan has been doing the Thanksgiving luncheon for over 20 years.

In last year's luncheon, the Rotarians also raffled off prizes to the congregates. (Clarissa V. David) sentations by Colin Thompson of Thompson Law Office, LLC; Alfred K. Pangelinan of Meridian Land Surveying, LLC; Vicente Sablan of American Appraisal Associates; and Jon Abrams of Land Tenure Consultants.

Land Tenure Consultants was contracted by DPW in September 2010 to develop the manual that will establish policies and procedures for the acquisition, compensation, management, and maintenance of designated public right-of-ways to be implemented by DPW.

The manual also seeks to improve the project development process and provide opportunities for additional funding eligibility for roadway infrastructure projects under the current federal-aid highway program.

"A federal regulation requires us to have a CNMI Rights-of-Way Manual in compliance with the federal regulations," DPW Secretary Martin Sablan.

Now that the CNMI receives more funding from the Federal Highway Administration under the U.S. Department of Transportation, Sablan said it would be vital for them to finalize the manual.

Besides comments obtained from the two-day workshop,

Sablan said they will also seek comments from surveyors, architects, engineers, and appraisers in the CNMI to be incorporated in the final draft of the manual.

Sablan told Saipan Tribune that the 125-page manual, which contains seven chapters, is expected to be completed by December 2011, then forwarded for approval to the Federal Highway Administration.

Once the manual is formally adopted hopefully by Jan. 1, 2012, Sablan said they will revisit and update the manual every five years to reflect any changes.

Book highlights climate change impact on Pacific fisheries

CONTRIBUTED PHOTO

Marshall Islands Foreign Affairs Minister John M. Silk, SPC Director-General Dr. Jimmie Rodgers, one of the book's editors, Dr. Johann Bell, and James Batley, Deputy Director General Asia, Pacific and Program Enabling Group, AusAID at the book launch in Noumea, New Caledonia on Monday.

NOUMEA, New Caledonia—Climate change poses a fresh challenge to Pacific nations already facing many pressures to sustain their fish resources—a vital source of food.

A new book, Vulnerability of Tropical Pacific Fisheries and Aquaculture to Climate Change, claims there will be winners and losers from climate change, and the way Pacific governments react and adapt will be vital.

The book is published by the Secretariat of the Pacific Community and was launched at the Conference of the Pacific Community in Noumea on Monday by James Batley, Deputy Director General of AusAID (the Australian Agency for International Development).

Heads of government, ministers and ambassadors from 22 Pacific Island countries and territories (PICTs) and Australia, France, New Zealand, and the USA are in Noumea to discuss the impact of climate change on food and drinking water—one of the most critical issues facing the Pacific region today.

Dr. Johann Bell, principal fisheries scientist with SPC's Strategic Engagement, Policy and Planning Facility and one of the book's three editors, says the losers will include those who continue to depend on coral reef fisheries.

"Higher sea temperatures, ocean acidification, and loss of important habitats like coral reefs, seagrass beds, mangroves and intertidal flats are expected to have a dramatic impact on the fish and shellfish that support many coastal communities," Bell says. "Coral reefs are very likely to suffer a lot of damage due to the changing climate, and coastal communities will have to find new sources of food."

He says that the communities will need to transfer their fishing effort from coral reef fisheries to the rich tuna resources of the region.

A winner under climate change will be the freshwater fisheries that are so important to the inland population of Papua New Guinea. The book also outlines the expected improvement of conditions for freshwater pond aquaculture.

But this will not be enough to feed the rapidly increasing populations of the Pacific Islands, and they will need to rely more on tuna as a source of food.

SPC Director-General Dr. Jimmie Rodgers says the book is the most comprehensive analysis of the impact of climate change on Pacific fisheries and aquaculture, and the ecosystems that underpin these vital activities.

"The reality is that there will be countries in the Pacific with increased populations and fewer fish to eat. We ignore the book at our peril because it contains sound scientific analyses, hard-hitting key messages and policy options," he says. "It gives Pacific leaders the opportunity to look 20 years ahead and plan for the future."

Bell says the final chapter in the book sets out ways that the Pacific nations can adapt to the new circumstances. These include installing more fish aggregating devices to attract tuna closer to shore, encouraging some communities to grow fish in freshwater ponds, and improving management of mining and forestry industries to prevent sediments and nutrients from spoiling fish habitat.

The book includes contributions from 88 international scientists and fisheries specialists and took three and a half years to bring together. It was written with the support of AusAID.

Vulnerability of Tropical Pacific Fisheries and Aquaculture to Climate Change was edited by Dr Johann Bell, Johanna Johnson and Alistair Hobday. (SPC)

Flashback

A LOOK BACK AT PAST YEARS' HEADLINES

Nov. 9, 1999

Teno slams use of NMI waters to transship radioactive waste

Gov. Pedro P. Tenorio has assailed the practice of using the CNMI waters for transshipment of nuclear waste without informing the island government because it endangers the people and the environment of the Northern Marianas. In expressing concern to the devastating effects of an accident while the vessels are passing the CNMI waters, Tenorio urged the Legislature to pass appropriate measures to protect the people's health and the environment. "We have always maintained that we should be informed whenever vessels carrying nuclear waste travel close to the CNMI because we want to be prepared in case anything happens," he said.

CPA renews plea for land transfer

Commonwealth Ports Authority Executive Director Carlos H. Salas has expressed hope that the Board of Public Lands would decide favorably on the agency's request to transfer to CPA some 39 acres of land at Tanapag Harbor for the expansion of its seaport property. The additional land area will be used to accommodate larger volume of cargo and materials as well as support future growth activities in the port. Salas said the transfer would allow the ports authority maintain a cohesive and orderly plan for its future expansion. Three years ago, the United States released to the CNMI government the leasehold interest in 39 acres of the 44-acre Covenant leaseback land at Tanapag Harbor.

DPS seeks stronger ties with the community

Business owners and residents in Garapan yesterday held a dialogue with the police yesterday in a move to reduce the crime rate in the tourist district. According to Maj. Clyde Norita and Police Officer Jason Tarkong, the meeting served as a venue to launch the program dubbed as Community Oriented Policing (COP). "We would like the community to become partners of the police in identifying concerns instead of just calling 911 and leaving everything to the police," said Mr. Tarkong, who is the officer-in-charge of the bike patrol program.

PSS to put up its own E-rate server

The Public School System expects to partially complete this January a phase of its proposed system-wide network infrastructure with the installation of a telecommunications server equivalent to the formidable system used by the United States Airforce and the Navy. In the entire Pacific region, American Samoa's public education sector is the sole entity equipped with such facility funded through an E-rate telecommunications discount. The CNMI may soon be comparable with American Samoa once the $10,000 server is put in place next year. Technology Coordinator Mark B. Savares said the school system was supposed to tap two of the HPLC3 model servers under its original E-rate application package which could have doubled PSS' capacity to obtain direct access to speedy telecommunication services.

TANO Group gets contract for CUC sewerage project

The Commonwealth Utilities Corp. has conditionally expressed its intent to award the $115,800 Gualo Rai sewer system expansion project to the TANO Group Inc. Rep. William S. Torres clarified, though, that due to the limited funds, the CUC has decided to split the project into two phases, citing a letter by CUC executive director Timothy P. Villagomez to TANO Group Inc. vice-president Robert J. Bracken. "According to Villagomez, the initial stage of the project-Phase I-will cost $65,696, while Phase II will cost $50,104," said Torres. In his letter to Bracken, Villagomez reminded the construction firm about the decision to split the project into two during its earlier discussion with CUC Wastewater Division officials.

12th Legislature hopes to pass more bills

Despite being characterized as a lame duck Legislature, Senate President Paul A. Manglona expressed confidence that the 12th Legislature can still pass some bills, including the budget measure, two months before the new lawmakers come in. Manglona said he plans to communicate with House Speaker Benigno R. Fitial to suggest that they sit down in a conference committee to tackle the bills that can still be passed. "Like I said, we're going to have a leadership meeting, maybe next week or the following week, to look at all our legislative calendar and work with the Senate and House leadership and get those bill that we can agree on over to the Governor's desk," he said.

7 mariners found safe on deserted Pacific island

HONOLULU—Seven missing mariners are safe after a Coast Guard aircrew spotted the men on a deserted Pacific island Sunday.

Seven males between the ages of 19 and 30, were last seen leaving the southwestern part of Maloelap Atoll en route north to Kaven Island Thursday. The Royal Australian Navy liaison to the Republic of Marshall Islands contacted Coast Guard Joint Rescue Coordination Center Honolulu watchstanders at 10pm Thursday and reported the vessel as 24 hours overdue.

An HC-130 Hercules airplane and crew was launched from Air Station Barbers Point to assist with the search.

JRCC personnel worked closely with Royal Australian Navy liaison in developing joint search patterns that would be used by assets of both governments. An Air Marshall Islands aircraft was also launched for the search.

On the second day the HC-130 Hercules airplane crew spotted the missing men on the beach of a small island waving palm fronds near a blue vessel matching the description of the overdue 20-foot skiff. The Republic of the Marshall Islands' 107-foot patrol boat Lomor was diverted and picked up the survivors.

The survivors were taken back to their home atolls via the Royal Australian Navy motor vessel Miss Telitha.

There were no injuries reported. (USCG)

Another CHC nurse passes certified nephrology exam

Saipan motorists urged to watch out for cyclists

All Saipan motorists are being urged to be particularly cautious when driving in the morning hours of Dec. 3 when participants of the 5th Annual Hell of the Marianas Century Cycle take to the road.

According to a Pacific Islands Club statement yesterday, Hell of the Marianas cyclists will be riding in packs from 6:30am to 9:30am on the northbound lane of Isa Drive near San Vicente, Papago, Kagman, and Capitol Hill.

There will be cones to indicate the bike lane as well

28, son of Adonis I. Santos and Josephine L. Santos, is now the sixth certified nephrology nurse at CHC.

"I am very happy and thankful that the exam was finally over because I usually study after my work instead of relaxing. Now I can relax after my duty and at the same time I could help my children with their homework," Santos told Saipan Tribune.

Nephrology nurses primarily care for patients with either acute or chronic kidney problems. Much of their work involves working with dialysis patients.

Santos took the exam in Virginia on Oct. 4, 2011, just two days after attending his commencement ceremony at the University of Phoenix, Washington D.C. for his bachelor's degree in Nursing.

as DPS officers and official media vehicles. If motorists can circumvent these portions of Isa Drive during the above times, it will prevent heavy traffic congestion and enhance safety for all.

"For additional safety measures, we ask the public to restrain their dogs in the morning along the route," the PIC statement adds.

The 100-kilometer (62-mile) course will take racers from PIC through Kobleville to the Saipan International Airport, past Herman's Bakery through San Vicente, Papago, down to Lao Lao Golf Course entrance and back, down to Kingfisher Golf Links and back, down Capital Hill, to the top of San Roque's Radar Station, to Suicide Cliff, Bird Island Lookout, the Grotto, Banzai Cliff, to American Memorial Park and back to PIC.

Approximately 200 cyclists are expected to race in this international event with professionals from Russia, Korea, Japan, Guam and Saipan.

"Drivers, please be careful as more bicyclists will be riding on the roads training from now until Saturday, Dec. 3, 2011," the statement adds. (PR)

When will the GOP get serious about this race?

There's no getting around it. The only way to get ahead these days is to Put Yourself Out There.

You are no one without your Twitter account, your Facebook page, your online portfolio. Privacy and modesty are so ... dark ages. There was a time, probably when dinosaurs roamed the land, when boasting—or “tooting your own horn,” as the cave moms would say—was considered poor form. Now, it's not just acceptable, it's mandatory.

The truly ambitious must advance through multiple tiers of exhibitionism. Start with Facebook. Advance to YouTube. Next stop, a TV reality show. Followed by a regular gig on a network talk show. Then you write your memoir and take it on the road. And once you reach the top of your game (or not) ... you run for president!

This is what the 24-hour news cycle and unlimited Internet platforms and the public's hunger for entertainment have wrought: the presidency as a publicity stunt.

All campaigns have their unserious candidates. Think Alan Keyes, Ralph Nader, Steve Forbes, Al Sharpton, to name a few. Mickey Mouse snares a share of votes in every presidential election—for real.

But never has it been so easy for publicity seekers to command the limelight.

Sarah Palin wrote the book on it, with her provocative Facebook posts, her Fox News gig, her reality TV show and, yes, her books. The woman has made a fortune just holding out the idea of running for president.

Newt Gingrich is a washed-up politician with a past as checkered as a tablecloth. His campaign staff bailed because they didn't think he was serious about a campaign. But there he is, pushing his books, raising a bit of money and actually coming across as a grownup during some of the GOP primary debates.

And then there's the Herman Cain phenomenon, a publicity stunt run scarily amok.

Say this about Cain—he is Out There. He has hosted a talk radio show, written a syndicated opinion column, run for the U.S. Senate, worked the motivational speech circuit and written five books. He's even run for president once before, in 2000.

Cain started his second presidential run the same way he completed his first—as an unserious candidate. He displays a shocking lack of interest in and knowledge about foreign affairs. He thought that as president he could sign an executive order outlawing all abortions. Like Gingrich, he has had trouble holding on to staff.

But a funny thing happened on the way to becoming a campaign 2012 footnote: Herman Cain caught fire. Conservative voters fell head over heels for the folksy candidate with the unworkable but oh-so-catchy 9-9-9 tax “reform” scam.

As of this week Cain was toe-to-toe with Mitt Romney in the

Cannes Hu's Renmin Be Nice @ G20

Cannes is in France, pronounced “Kan.” Hu Jintao is the Prime Minister of the People's (Renmin) Republic of Zhongguo at the G20 conference in France, trying to be nice as, ironically, the capitalist economies expect socialist China's renminbi to bail out the debt crisis affecting many governments of the so-called free market economies. The collapse of the economy of Greece threatens the downfall of the euro currency, an eventuality that would ripple in tsunami force across global financial structures!

We would be nice, too, but we were not in Nice, pronounced Nis, 30 km northeast of Cannes in Provence south of France (our familiarity with the region is only through our eldest daughter, who spent a year in Avignon to polish her French, and our limited taste of its famous wines from its viticulture) this week, two days prior to the G20 meeting. But the voices of Occupy Wall Street movement were echoed on the streets of Nice as thousand demonstrators aired their concerns prior to the gathering of the G20 financial ministers and heads of central banks joined by some head of states.

Security forces turned Cannes into a Spartan fortress, shorn of any tolerance for any face-painted clown, tree hugging eco-loco, flower-behind-your-ear love child, or placard-carrying protester of any nationality. The inspirational birthplace of Cirque du Soleil has lost its sense of humor, and the wellsprings of egalite, equalite, fraternite joined a terror-stricken world of fear-laden governments who are now afraid of the shadows of their own middle and lower economic classes from Main Street.

Skull-fractured Iraq Marine veteran Scott Olsen, hit by a tear gas canister in the Occupy Oakland police raid, has suddenly emerged as a battle cry in many “Occupy” locations across the country and has angered a few Corps “brothers” over what is perceived as unnecessary police brutality against peaceful demonstrators. Suddenly, the sentiment is showing up in diverse locations from Texas to Georgia, California to Philadelphia.

Meanwhile, the G20 is touting itself as the possible model of global governance, guided by the financial architecture developed in its 1999 formation. Libya decided not to go along with this model and refused to establish a central bank, to the chagrin of EU and the US of A, a detail that might have contributed to NATO and the US' earnest support of the eventual disposal of Moammar Gadhafi.

Members of G20 are the euro-centric EU, protective NAFTA, the newly organized BRICS, combining 90 percent of the world's GNP, and 80 percent of the world's trade. I have the feeling the corporate boardrooms around the world are not too unhappy with this possibility. Nor do I think the Occupy Wall Street folks will take it sitting down!

Already, Permaculture with its graywater systems, seed ball and other technologies are being demonstrated and used in the NYC Occupy site. Two years ago, we attempted to turn a Saipan 10-acre spread into a demo for sustainable earth technologies connected to a science experiment at SVES. Our enthusiasm faded with the discovery that our local partner stuck 20 stalks of MJ in his farm to support a hospital service for which he did not have sufficient medical coverage. I decided that being on the wrong side of the law on Saipan, without the guardian connection, is no homeland security!

One of my Oral English students heading for flying lessons in Florida next year, in introducing himself as part of the class exercise, declared that his life's stance is always using what he has, and not be stuck in hoping for what he does not have.

I thought of all the heat spilled in verbiage and ink against those we consider responsible for failing to govern well, or the legal maneuvers we've tried to rid the islands of the “foreigners” who once did our bidding but are now expendable, and wonder what we could do with all that energy.

Tony Pellegrino is adamant in the commercial viability of food production on island and we certainly have all resources available (HR, sun, soil and water), but this will not be if we think that somehow, energetic and amiable Kilili and Uncle Sam, or a casino bill, or a change in government personnel is going to deliver the CNMI from the dire straits it is in. So why not focus in getting everyone currently residing in the CNMI to really occupy it, and decide to create a new life with what we've got, now?

Hu Jintao and the BRICS (Brazil, Russia, India and S. Africa) decided to focus on their own backyards and let EU deal with Greece and itself, forgoing any messianic complex to intervene, though we do not think it really could do much even if it wanted to.

For the ledgers are cooked. The financial system that has spawned an illusory house of phantom wealth, evident in the 64 million unoccupied real estate units in China, plus the paper inequality in the U.S. of the 1 percent rich lording it over the 99 percent who are deep in debt and up in arms, enflames all kinds of grassroots movements, uprisings, revolts, and even prayer vigils.

We can all decide to occupy the planet sans illusions of wealth, now; then, fructify the earth, and live! Pass the spade and the hoe, please!

Rights to sea & seabed resources

Perhaps we're a bunch of effete people, lacking the courage and resolution to decisively move forward on matters of state. Or is it that we're too weak, too indecisive, and too pusillanimous to dispose of vital issues on a timely basis. Perhaps we've settled for the usual dish of instant gratification, hoping hard work doesn't return for purposeful resolution. This dismissive behavior now haunts us, quizzing how did we miss it altogether.

Thus the persistent use of the ad hoc approach that has hardened into normal modus operandi. Now we're backpedaling, quizzing if there's still some window of opportunity to claim what we think are ours. We say so as though the CNMI is a sovereign country. One such issue is the claim to unilateral disposition of everything within the 200-mile EEZ of the NMI—sea and seabed resources.

Indeed, there may be room to make a claim for it, based on fishing as a tradition in this archipelago since time immemorial. Yes, our forefathers have fished these waters even as far out as 500 miles to support the dietary needs of our people in the Northern Marianas community. I am sure, too, that our forefathers would quickly point out that what's ours is still ours for they've never given any of it to Spain, Germany, Japan and now the U.S.

I can understand and appreciate the rising sentiment: "Why do we need the permission of the federal government to dispose of sea and seabed resources on the islands as we see fit?" Isn't it our waters for over four thousand years? How come it is now argued that we can't legally lay claim to these resources? Yes, indeed, it makes perfect sense of the relationship between islanders and the seas around them and the economic implications that comes with the territory. But would this sentiment, legal and otherwise, sit well with the U.S. Congress or U.S. Supreme Court? It's an issue of who has sovereign rights or who has sovereign rights to national resources, the U.S. or the CNMI?

Would our argument suffice if we use the UN Law of the Sea Treaty to which the U.S. isn't a member? I understand from a legal expert that the CNMI had up until March of 1987 to lay claim to its sea and seabed resources. But it lost it when the Magnuson Act, governing law of the sea issues for the country, came into effect that year. Hmmm! We must have been sleeping on the job again? Loss of full control over our resources was further reinforced by Section 1 of the Covenant Agreement where we surrendered sovereignty to the national government. The Magnuson Act deals with the sovereign rights of the U.S. over its 200-mile EEZ that now includes the CNMI. This is legally where we are today. Missed the boat? Definitely! You can mouth off about it but there's nothing up that alley.

Is there any room to claim ownership to what's in our waters? Maybe. But the CNMI can't begin the long journey of negotiations by spouting off what's questionably ours in the pages of newspapers. It must be addressed formally in order to set the wheels in motion. Otherwise, we can just "let it be" and live happily ever after. In brief, if you feel so strongly about it, then lift your first step on a thousand-mile journey to see if our claim is fact or fiction. Why treat it with another 10-foot pole?

Hmmm! Why do we go to watch the parade when it has long since left the ground? Is the Johnny Come Lately syndrome now a permanent fixture of the local culture? A`Saina!

2nd Marianas political status commission

There's a proposal to establish a second Marianas Political Status Commission to review certain issues relating to the deepening dysfunctional relationship between the CNMI and the feds. But let's begin by understanding a simple legal fact: The relationship per the Covenant Agreement is a permanent one.

There's the preliminary query that focuses on: Are you satisfied? Well, are we talking about critical assessment of the performance of both sides of the Pacific Divide? Or is the query intended to quickly shift the blame to Uncle Sam once more? I mean, whining and machine industry that targeted locals, was subject to a referendum and it failed. So, due to the concerns of many, these poker establishments will be eventually removed with the current casino gambling legislation that I have previously introduced.

Personally, I am very concerned about the welfare of my family, friends, and island neighbors throughout the Commonwealth. I've introduced casino gambling legislation that offers strong regulations and a recipe for success, both for the government and the island residents as well. I have observed the comments of both the proponents and opponents of casino gambling for Saipan, and I now I have witnessed the NMC survey that has declared the obvious winner in this delayed development = apathy.

This is a dangerous situation for a community. The lack of caring about what happens leads to chaos. Last Friday, only 3 percent (425) of the Saipan registered voters said that they were against casino gambling, and that leaves 97 percent who voted yes or didn't care what happens. The burden for a clear and convincing victory had rested with the opponents of casino gambling, and they failed to convince me or the rest of the island that they are in the majority. It is time now for the silent majority to be protected.

To this end, I say that the silent majority wants action. Casino gambling offers a possible solution to the continuous economic President Paul Mangloña were enthusiastic in their support of the overall project.

Thanks also go to the NMC Office of the President and the NMC Office of Institutional Advancement, which helped to coordinate press releases and other outreach projects.

There is no way that I can express my appreciation to the dedication and enthusiasm expressed by the nearly 100 students who took part in setting up, conducting, and closing down a very complex operation. We should all be proud of the extra efforts that the students made over and above classroom performance requirements. It's a great sign for the future of the people of the CNMI.

Last, but definitely not least, I would like to express my heartfelt appreciation to those 841 citizens who got the word, felt the need, and came to the polls to cast their ballots. This is what Citizenship Day was supposed to be all about. Thank you all.

blaming others for our own inadequacies is a forte on the islands. Could we speak maturely about the entire nine yards without the blame game syndrome?

I think the more realistic route is to revive the Commission on Federal Laws, the vehicle that was established and tasked the duty to seek refinement of the relationship. Indeed, the relationship has deteriorated into dysfunction when the commission died a silent death. It obviates the need to critically take an honest introspective review of measures we've taken to find out what we thought we did that didn't do to strengthen the institution of self-government.

Indeed, we're aware of the forced contraction of the local economy, triggered by uncertainties from the takeover of immigration. But such change in command of immigration was forthcoming and we even failed to plan for it. Had we had a plan of our own to use as a gauge, we would have been upfront and candid about how egregiously such change would adversely impact the local economy. But we sat back complacently singing "let it be." Obviously, leadership deficit was at its best and now the deathly deepening economic disaster.

In brief, there's a greater need for an honest self-evaluation of how well we've done instituting policies to strengthen local self-government. Is bankruptcy and economic annihilation the prized trophy of the CNMI after millions of dollars in grant funds from Uncle Sam over the last three decades? Like Buddy Magoo would say, "Ai! I don't know Maria!"

Apathy wins

Notwithstanding the fine efforts of the NMC students to organize and conduct a voters' survey on the question of casino gambling for the island of Saipan, the unfortunate outcome of this democratic exercise was that Saipan has truly sunk into an abyss of apathy.

The people of Saipan and the CNMI have been suffering from a long-term socio-economic depression, which is paralyzing the island residents. The classic signs of depression are apathy and a lack of caring to participate in social events and activities. Furthermore, with the CNMI economy and jobs sinking deeper into the Marianas Trench, we are witnessing the byproducts of desperation and frustration, i.e., rising crime, rising domestic abuse, and rising drug use to escape the overall frustration of a society going to civic hell. Unfortunately, there are those who are preaching that rising crime and domestic abuse and other social evils will come with casino gambling. Well, the crime and social evils are here now, without casino gambling. It is a known fact that a poor economy and lack of jobs sadly produces more crime and social misbehavior. As a historical and perplexing aside, Public Law 3-70, which established the poker

Letter to the Editor

Letter of appreciation

Although the results of the Nov. 4 advisory referendum were far from satisfactory, I do wish to express my appreciation to everyone who took part in it.

The smooth working operation would never have been possible without the extremely valuable assistance and guidance of Mr. Robert Guerrero and his very talented assistant, Ms. Julie Villagomez, and others on the staff who not only guided us through the setup and tabulation but also provided oversight for each polling place.

The Office of the Public Auditor also provided invaluable supervision of the conduct of the voting. The volunteers from that office provided a very valuable service for long hours.

Special thanks go to IT&E, which loaned us six cell phones to establish a communications network on voting day. These help to avoid a huge gas bill.

Members of the Senate staff and the Legislative Bureau also provided very valuable logistics support. Sen. Ralph Torres and Senate depression and apathy in the CNMI, and it will hopefully end the reduced paydays and government services.

To repeat, casino gambling means possible opportunities for jobs, economic growth, and a move to provide more security for our island residents. I said possible, because it will work with the cooperation of our government leaders, the business sector and, most importantly, the support of our people.

polls, and it's unclear whether expanding allegations of sexual harassment complaints against Cain in a former job will dim the ardor of his fans.

Character really isn't an issue in the publicity stunt candidacy. It's all about how you present yourself.

What's left of the Republican establishment would very much like to shut down the Cain circus and get on with the task of prepping Romney to take on President Barack Obama.

Oh, but why stop the party so soon?

Herman Cain's troubles are nearly as riveting as reality star Kim Kardashian's impending divorce. And please, bring on more GOP debates. They're not great for clarifying the issues, but as entertainment they are unparalleled.

Sooner or later, though, we will have to get down to business. Herman Cain is not going to be the Republican nominee for president.

Romney, a serious candidate with a resume of substance, will almost certainly run again Obama, who has served with dignity and purpose, even as he goes prematurely gray from the burdens of the job.

We wouldn't have it any other way. As for the publicity seekers, there's always another book deal, or maybe a talk show offer. Why serve if you can Just Be Out There?

Eurozone wants cross-party commitment in Greece

BRUSSELS (AP)—Greece can get a crucial euro8 billion ($11 billion) slice of bailout money this month if the leaders of the two main parties both commit in writing to the terms of the country's two massive bailouts and the austerity measures and economic reforms that they require, eurozone finance chiefs said Monday.

That payment, which has been delayed by two months, would head off a potentially disastrous default as early as December.

Jean-Claude Juncker, the Luxembourg prime minister who also chairs the eurozone finance ministers meetings, said that ministers at their get-together in Brussels asked for a letter co-signed by the two party leaders that they will implement that program.

Such cross-party commitment is important as Greece gears up for new elections early next year.

"It is essential that the entire political class is now restoring the confidence that had been lost into the Greek commitment to the EU/IMF program and to the agreement of the 27th of October," said European Union Monetary Affairs Commissioner Olli Rehn. He was referring to an agreement drawn up at a summit of European leaders last month in cooperation with the International Monetary Fund.

While finance ministers were meeting in Brussels, Greek Prime Minister George Papandreou and opposition party leader Antonis Samaras were trying to form a unity government that would lead the country in the meantime.

"It should have been done months ago," Juncker said of the cross-party government.

Italy, which has seen the interest rates on its bonds rise to a euro era record of 6.67 percent, also came in for scrutiny at the meeting Monday in Brussels. Italian Finance Minister Giulio Tremonti assured his colleagues that his country would implement the financial reforms promised last month in a letter from Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi, including balancing the budget by 2013 as well as reforming pensions and deregulating the labor market.

Rehn said it was crucial for Italy to implement the policies outlined in Berlusconi's letter.

He said he had sent a letter to Italian authorities asking specific questions about the implementation of the program and he expected a written reply by the end of this week. He did not say what the questions were.

Rehn said a technical mission would be sent to Rome on Tuesday or Wednesday to intensify surveillance of the country's fiscal policies.

The finance ministers also spelled out technical details of their plan to give their bailout fund more leverage. The eurozone wants to increase the firepower of the euro440 billion European Financial Stability Facility to euro1 trillion by allowing it to insure bond issues from shaky countries like Italy and Spain and by seeking investors from outside the eurozone.

United flies first US commercial advanced biofuel flight

CHICAGO—United Continental Holdings announced that its subsidiary Continental Airlines today is operating the first U.S. commercial flight powered by advanced biofuels. Flight 1403, a Boeing 737-800, departs Houston's Bush Intercontinental Airport at 10:30 am for Chicago O'Hare International Airport, making United the first U.S. airline to fly passengers using a blend of sustainable, advanced biofuel and traditional petroleum-derived jet fuel.

"United is taking a significant step forward to advance the use of environmentally responsible and cost-efficient alternative fuels," said Pete McDonald, United's executive vice president and chief operations officer. "Sustainable biofuels, produced on a large scale at an economically viable price, can one day play a meaningful role in powering everyone's trip on an airline."

Today's flight demonstrates United's commitment to sustainable biofuels and making progress toward enhancing energy security, diversity of our fuel supply and a reduction in lifecycle greenhouse gas emissions compared to traditional fossil fuels.

"Today, roughly four months since the approval of hydroprocessed renewable fuels in commercial aviation, we are excited to see the deployment of these fuels on a domestic U.S. flight," said Air Transport Association of America (ATA) Vice President and Chief Economist John Heimlich. "ATA member airlines continue to demonstrate leadership in fostering new and environmentally preferred sources of energy to transport people and goods throughout the globe."

Solazyme, working with Honeywell's UOP process technology, developed the algae oil that was refined into jet fuel to power today's commercial flight. Solazyme produced the world's first 100 percent algae-derived jet fuel for both commercial and military applications.

Also today, United is announcing it has signed a letter of intent with Solazyme to negotiate the purchase of 20 million gallons of jet fuel per year, derived exclusively from algae oil, for delivery as early as 2014. Solazyme, headquartered in south San Francisco, manufactured the algae oil used on today's flight through its proprietary fermentation process. The end product was then refined outside Houston using renewable jet fuel processing technology from Honeywell's UOP.

"Looking at United, a company that understands the sustainability of tomorrow means environmental responsibility today, we see a true pioneer in the future of flight," said Jonathan Wolfson, Solazyme's CEO. (PR)

Senate considers aid for jobless vets, contractors

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Senate voted overwhelmingly Monday to temporarily set aside its partisan standoff over President Barack Obama's jobs plan and move toward giving a modest economic spark to two potent interest groups: veterans and businesses.

In a 94-1 roll call, senators voted to start debating a measure repealing a requirement that federal, state and many local governments withhold 3 percent of their payments to contractors. That bill has been lobbied by a wide swath of industry groups large and small and has no significant opposition.

By the time the Senate approves the legislation—perhaps later this week—Democrats planned to add language backed by both parties offering tax breaks to companies that hire veterans and providing vets with employment counseling and other job-hunting services.

Monday's one-sided vote signaled that barring an unexpected twist, the Senate was likely to send the overall measure to the House, which returns from a recess next week.

The tax credits, up to $9,600 for companies hiring disabled veterans who have been jobless at least six months, would represent the first—though tiny—piece of Obama's $447 billion jobs proposal to be approved by Congress, assuming Senate and then House passage.

The expected cooperation contrasted with the two parties' battling at a time when persistent 9 percent unemployment is keeping 14 million Americans out of work and looming as the dominant issue in the 2012 presidential and congressional elections. It also masked the divisions between Democrats and Republicans over the keystones of Obama's jobs plan—spending huge sums to repair roads, hire teachers and give workers and companies breaks on the payroll tax.

Not coincidentally, the measure was beginning to move toward approval just ahead of Friday's Veterans Day celebrations, when lawmakers stream home for speeches and parades. And even as the two sides seemed ready to cooperate, they exchanged partisan slings over lawmakers' refusal so far to approve the rest of the president's jobs proposal.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Consumer borrowing up, but credit card use falls

WASHINGTON (AP)—Americans borrowed more in September to buy cars and attend college, but they charged less to their credit cards for a third straight month. The figures suggest that consumers are growing more cautious about taking on high-interest debt in a weak economy. Total consumer borrowing rose by $7.4 billion in September, the Federal Reserve said Monday. In August, it had fallen by the most in 16 months. The September increase reflected a 5.8 percent increase in borrowing in the category that includes car and student loans. But the category that covers credit card purchases dropped 1 percent after larger declines in July and August.

Northeast power outages hit many businesses hard

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP)—Businesses big and small have taken a beating from the power outages caused by the record-setting October snowstorm and the losses are only beginning to be tallied, owners and experts said Monday as tens of thousands of Connecticut homes and companies entered a second week without electricity. "I think there's going to be a huge trickle-down effect and we may not know the results for several months," said Andy Markowski, Connecticut director for the National Federation of Independent Business. "I don't know of any small business that can afford to lose a week or more of sales. ... We're just literally and figuratively beginning to pick up the pieces." The Oct. 29-30 storm dumped heavy snow across the Northeast and downed scores of trees and utility wires. Three million homes and businesses lost power at the height of the storm.

Oil above $95 as month-long 27 pct rally pauses

SINGAPORE (AP)—Oil prices hovered above $95 a barrel Tuesday in Asia as investors mulled whether slowing global economic growth justifies further gains after crude surged 27 percent during the last month. Benchmark crude for December delivery was down 5 cents at $95.47 a barrel at midday Singapore time in electronic trading on the New York Mercantile Exchange. The contract rose $1.26 to settle at $95.52 in New York on Monday. Brent crude was up 2 cents at $114.58 a barrel on the ICE Futures Exchange in London.

Penn State sex scandal engulfing revered Paterno

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP)—Time and again, questions about an alleged cover-up of a sex abuse scandal at Penn State, circled back to one name: Joe Paterno.

Major college football's oldest, winningest and perhaps most revered coach, was engulfed Monday in a growing furor involving former defensive coordinator and one-time heir apparent Jerry Sandusky, who was indicted on charges of sexually abusing eight boys over 15 years.

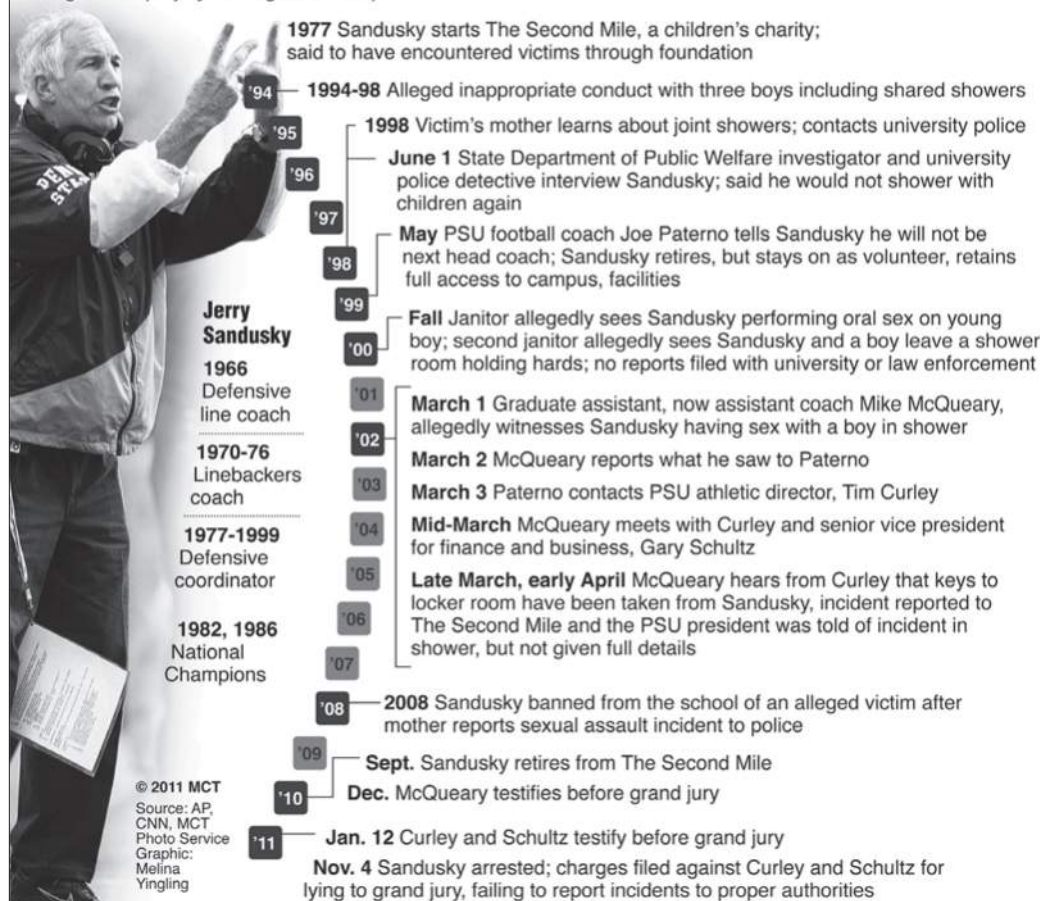

The Pennsylvania state police commissioner said Paterno fulfilled his legal requirement when he relayed to university administrators that a graduate assistant had seen Sandusky attacking a young boy in the team's locker room shower in 2002. But the commissioner also questioned whether Paterno had a moral responsibility to do more.

On the Happy Valley campus and in the surrounding town of State College, some were even asking whether the 84-year-old coach should step down after 46 seasons on the sidelines.

Two Penn State officials, Senior Vice President Gary Schultz and Athletic Director Tim Curley, surrendered on charges that they failed to alert police to

Woman accuses Cain of bold sexual advance

NEW YORK (AP)—Leaving little to the imagination, a Chicago-area woman on Monday accused Republican presidential hopeful Herman Cain of making a crude sexual advance more than a decade ago when she was seeking his help finding a job.

"Come clean," Sharon Bialek challenged Cain at a news conference in New York at which she described herself as "a face and a voice" to support other accusers who have so far remained anonymous.

Cain's campaign swiftly denied Bialek's account. "All allegations of harassment against Mr. Cain are completely false," it said in a written statement.

Even so, Bialek's nationally broadcast appearance on cable television marked a new and—for Cain—dangerous turn in a controversy that he has struggled for more than a week to shed. An upstart in the presidential race, Cain shot to the top of public opinion polls in recent weeks and emerged, however temporarily, as the main conservative challenger to Mitt Romney.

Accompanied by her prominent lawyer, Gloria Allred, Bialek accused Cain of making a sexual advance one night in mid-July 1997, when she had travelled to Washington to have dinner with him in hopes he could help her find work.

She said the two had finished dinner and were in a car for what she thought was a ride to an office building.

"Instead of going into the offices he suddenly reached over and he put his hand on my leg, under my skirt toward my genitals," she said.

"He also pushed my head toward his crotch," she added.

Bialek said she told her boyfriend, an unidentified pediatrician, as well as a longtime male friend about the episode.

None of Cain's other accusers has provided details as graphic as Bialek's account. But Joel Bennett, an attorney who represents one of them, said her details were "similar in nature" to what his client encountered.

Allred, a prominent sex discrimination attorney with Democratic ties, moved preemptively to blunt any attacks on Bialek's motives. She described her client as a registered Republican, a single mother and a woman with a long and successful work history.

She also said Bialek "could have attempted to sell her story but chose not to do so," and knew that by stepping forward, she would receive scrutiny.

Bialek

Court records indicate Bialek had financial difficulties a decade ago when she filed for bankruptcy protection and reported $4,500 in unpaid rent and $13,000 in outstanding credit card bills.

Current property records show she owns a house on an acre of land in a Chicago suburb.

Some of Cain's allies immediately made a target of Allred, a Democratic campaign donor, rather than focusing any anger on Cain's accuser.

Georgia state Sen. Joshua McKoon, who has endorsed Cain, accused Allred of "carnival theatrics" fueled by a partisan agenda.

"Her involvement makes it clear that it's a political smear job orchestrated by those on the left because there is nothing more terrifying than Herman Cain as the Republican nominee," the Republican lawmaker said.

a judge set bail at $75,000. They weren't required to enter pleas.

Pennsylvania Attorney General Linda Kelly said Paterno is not a target of the investigation into how the school handled the accusations. But she refused to say the same for the university president, Graham Spanier.

"All I can say is again, I'm limited to what's contained in the presentment, and that this is an ongoing investigation," Kelly said.

State police Commissioner Frank Noonan said that although Paterno may have met his legal requirement to report suspected abuse by Sandusky, "somebody has to question about what I would consider the moral requirements for a human being that knows of sexual things that are taking place with a child."

He added: "I think you have the moral responsibility, anyone. Not whether you're a football coach or a university president or the guy sweeping the building. I think you have a moral responsibility to call us."

At a news conference, Noonan and Kelly were peppered with questions about whether Paterno was given details about what graduate assistant Mike McQueary—now the team's wide receivers coach—saw on the night of March 1, 2002.

The grand jury report said McQueary was in the locker room that night to put away some new sneakers when he heard "rhythmic, slapping sounds" and looked into the showers.

He reportedly saw a naked boy, about 10 years old, with his hands against the wall as Sandusky subjected him to anal sex. McQueary left immediately and first contacted his father before calling Paterno the next morning and then meeting at Paterno's home.

Exactly what was said during that meeting is unclear from the grand jury record, which states that Paterno called Curley the next day to tell him McQueary had seen Sandusky "in the Lasch Building showers fondling or doing something of a sexual nature to a young boy."

Paterno released a statement Sunday in which he said he was not told "the very specific actions" contained in the grand jury report, but that McQueary had seen "something inappropriate involving Mr. Sandusky."

Cyber weaknesses should deter US from waging war

WASHINGTON (AP)—America's critical computer networks are so vulnerable to attack that it should deter U.S. leaders from going to war with other nations, a former top U.S. cybersecurity official said Monday.

Richard Clarke, a top adviser to three presidents, joined a number of U.S. military and civilian experts in offering a dire assessment of America's cybersecurity at a conference, saying the country simply can't protect its critical networks.

Clarke said if he was advising the president he would warn against attacking other countries because so many of them—including China, North Korea, Iran and Russia—could retaliate by launching devastating cyberattacks that could destroy power grids, banking networks or transportation systems.

The U.S. military, he said, is entirely dependent on computer systems and could end up in a future conflict in which troops trot out onto a battlefield "and nothing works."

Clarke said a good national security adviser would tell the president that the U.S. might be able to blow up a nuclear plant somewhere, or a terrorist training center somewhere, but a number of countries could strike back with a cyberattack and "the entire U.S. economic system could be crashed in retaliation ... because we can't defend it today."

"I really don't know to what extent the weapon systems that have been developed over the last 10 years have been penetrated, to what extent the chips are compromised, to what extent the code is compromised," Clarke said. "I can't assure you that as you go to war with a cybersecurity-conscious, cybersecurity-capable enemy that any of our stuff is going to work."

Man charged with NY theft from Emirates princess

NEW YORK (AP)—Authorities say a serial thief has taken about $250,000 worth of jewelry, electronics and other valuables from a United Arab Emirates princess' luxury New York hotel room. Suspect James Bennett is due back in court Nov. 21 after a procedural appearance Monday. He faces grand larceny and other charges in an Oct. 30 theft from Dubai Princess Arwa al-Qassimi's room at The Plaza hotel and the Oct. 24 disappearance of employee paychecks from an office in another hotel. Bennett had been due to find out Monday whether he was indicted. Defense lawyer Javier Damien says he agreed to give prosecutors more time to investigate. No contact information for the princess was available.

Jury: Ex-polygamist performed illegal wedding

ROBERT LEE, Texas (AP)—A former polygamist bishop was convicted Monday of performing an illegal wedding ceremony between a 12-year-old girl and sect leader Warren Jeffs. Jurors deliberated about an hour and 20 minutes before finding Fredrick Merrill Jessop guilty of officiating over the 2006 ceremony at Yearning for Zion Ranch, owned by the Fundamentalist Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The FLDS holds polygamy as a fundamental belief and its men take multiple wives in what are termed "celestial marriages" in a ceremony called a "sealing."

NYC protesters erect military tents for winter

NEW YORK (AP)—The Occupy Wall Street protesters in New York City are preparing for the possibility of a punishing winter by erecting tents designed to withstand frigid temperatures. Some of the military grade tents are as big as tiny cottages. They began popping up Monday, with the first planned for medics and another designated as a safe space for women. Protester Jeffrey Brewer says three tents have been erected in Manhattan's Zuccotti Park and he's helping to install four more. He says another 20 are being ordered.

Energy minister says Bangkok floods to last a month

BANGKOK (AP)—Thailand's energy minister said the flood crisis in Bangkok is likely to drag on for another month, as authorities issued another evacuation advisory in a northern neighborhood and floodwaters inched further into the city's heart.

Energy Minister Pichai Nariphaphan said, however, that floods may finally begin to subside in the capital by mid-November, according to a government statement late Monday.

Top officials and experts have given varying estimates of how much Bangkok would flood and how long the threat would loom over the city, with some claiming several weeks ago the biggest window of danger to the sprawling metropolis of 9 million people had already passed.

Instead, the flood threat has only intensified, straining sandbag-stacking residents as more and more neighborhoods are swamped each day. The seemingly unstoppable floodwaters have overwhelmed canals, seeped up through drains and poured down condominium-lined highways. The water has now begun surrounding the city's northernmost subway stops, threatening to shut them down.

Evacuations have been ordered in 12 of Bangkok's 50 districts, with residents of the northern district of Klong Sam Wa told to leave Monday. The evacuations, which also effect parts of several other districts, are not mandatory, and many people are staying to protect homes and businesses.

On Tuesday, Football Federation Australia said a World Cup qualifier against Thailand scheduled for next week was moved to a smaller stadium in Bangkok because the original venue is being used as a flood evacuation center.

The FFA said in a statement that the Asian Group D match scheduled for Nov. 15 will be moved from the Rajamangala National Stadium in Bangkok's suburbs to the Suphachalasai Stadium downtown.

The flooding began in late July and has killed more than 500 people so far, mostly due to drownings. Some provinces to the north of Bangkok have been inundated for more than a month, and waters have started to re-

Strong quake hits southern Japan

TOKYO (AP)—A fairly strong earthquake with a preliminary magnitude of 6.8 has hit off the shores of Japan's southern Okinawa Island. Officials said the quake Tuesday about 135 miles (220 kilometers) away from the island was not expected to cause a tsunami. There were no immediate reports of damage or injuries. Northeastern Japan was devastated by a massive earthquake and tsunami on March 11 that left nearly 20,000 people dead or missing. Japan, which lies along the Pacific "Ring of Fire," is one of the world's most seismically active countries.

Stranded Everest trekkers clear out as fog lifts

KATMANDU, Nepal (AP)—More than 2,000 foreign trekkers stranded up to a week began leaving the Mount Everest region Monday as fog lifted and flights resumed at the area's only airport. As the visitors waited for the weather to clear, hotels in the village of Lukla were full and food supplies were running low. People slept in tents and hotel dining rooms. Some even walked down from Lukla to the nearest highway. Trekkers on the first flights Monday were happy to reach Katmandu, Nepal's capital.

SKorea approves WHO medicines shipment to NKorea

SEOUL, South Korea (AP)—South Korea has lifted its block on donating medicine to North Korea via the World Health Organization, amid signs of easing tension between the countries. South Korea previously had donated to a WHO program to send medicine and medical supplies to the North, but asked the organization to suspend the contribution after Pyongyang allegedly torpedoed a South Korean warship last year. The South Korean government said Tuesday that it has accepted WHO's request for using its remaining donation totaling about $7 million.

Pakistan trains 8,000 to protect nuclear arsenal

ISLAMABAD (AP)—Pakistan is training 8,000 additional people to protect the country's nuclear arsenal, which the U.S. fears could be vulnerable to penetration by Islamist militants at war with the West, the Pakistani military said.

Those fears were heightened by a recent U.S. magazine article that quoted unnamed Pakistani and American officials as saying Pakistan transports nuclear weapons components around the country in delivery vans with little security to avoid detection—a claim denied by Islamabad.

Pakistan insists its nuclear arsenal is well-defended, and the widespread fear among many Pakistanis is that the main threat stems not from al-Qaida or the Taliban, but from suspected U.S. plans to seize the country's weapons. These fears were heightened by the covert U.S. raid that killed Osama bin Laden in Pakistan in May.

Washington has insisted it has no plans to seize Pakistan's weapons.

But the recent article in The Atlantic magazine quoted unnamed American military and intelligence officials as saying the U.S. has trained extensively for potential missions in Pakistan to secure nuclear weapons or material that fall into the wrong hands.

Pakistan rarely reveals details about its nuclear program or the security around it. The announcement by the Pakistani military that it is training an additional 8,000 people to protect the nuclear arsenal could be seen as a response to the magazine article.

"This (group) comprises hand-picked officers and men, who are physically robust, mentally sharp and equipped with modern weapons and equipment," said the Pakistani military in a written statement Sunday.

The statement was released in conjunction with the graduation of 700 of these security personnel. The ceremony was attended by Maj. Gen. Muhammad Tahir, head of security for the Strategic Plans Division—the arm of the Pakistani military tasked with protecting the nuclear arsenal.

Tahir "reiterated that extensive resources have been made available to train, equip, deploy and sustain an independent and potent security force to meet any and every threat emanating from any quarter," according to the statement.

The Pakistani Foreign Ministry also put out a statement Sunday calling the allegations in the article in The Atlantic "pure fiction."

Fear that the U.S. could seize Pakistan's nuclear weapons is driven by widespread anti-Americanism in the country. Despite billions of dollars in American aid, 69 percent of people in the country view the U.S. as an enemy, according to a poll conducted by the U.S.-based Pew Research Center in June. The poll had a margin of error of plus or minus 4 percentage points.

The U.S. Embassy said Monday that it has confidence that Pakistan is aware of the range of threats to its nuclear arsenal and has given high priority to securing its weapons and material.

It quoted President Barack Obama as saying in March that he feels "confident about Pakistan's security around its nuclear weapons programs. But that doesn't mean that there isn't improvement to make in all of our nuclear security programs."

Classified American diplomatic documents released by WikiLeaks last December indicated that the U.S. was concerned that Islamist militants could get their hands on Pakistani nuclear material to make an illicit weapon.

Pakistan is producing nuclear weapons at a faster rate than any other country in the world, according to a memo from December 2008.

An article in the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists in July estimated that Pakistan has a nuclear weapons stockpile of 90-110 nuclear warheads. The country first successfully conducted a nuclear weapons test in 1998 in response to the nuclear program of its archenemy India.

Roadside bomb kills south Afghan police chief

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP)—A roadside bomb killed a district police chief and his two bodyguards in a restive southern province in the second attack in as many days targeting local authorities in Afghanistan, police officials said Monday.

The roadside bomb in Helmand exploded as Mohammad Saifullah, the police chief in the province's Garm Ser district, was driving by Sunday night, said Helmand provincial police chief Mohammad Hakim Angar. All three men were killed by the blast.

The province is one of Afghanistan's most violent, and sits in the heart of the Taliban's traditional stronghold in the south.

Security responsibilities in Hel-mand's capital have already been handed over to Afghan forces by NATO, as part of the U.S.-led coalition's plan to withdraw its combat troops from the country by the end of 2014. Two other districts in the province are being recommended for an upcoming second phase of handovers, but Garm Ser is not among them.

The police official's death comes a day after a suicide bomber blew himself up among worshippers concluding prayers on the first day of a main Islamic holiday, killing seven people including two local police officials, in the northern province of Baghlan. A second would-be suicide bomber was captured before detonating his explosives.

The attacks are part of the insur-gency's strategy of targeting Afghan government and security officials, and raise questions about Afghan security forces' ability to take on the Taliban by themselves after NATO withdraws its combat forces.

The U.S.-led coalition has said it has made significant gains in curtailing the Taliban's strength.

The coalition's push in the south of the country, the Taliban's traditional stronghold, has to a degree lessened the violence. But it has also pushed them to other parts of the country where attacks had been less common.

In the eastern province of Nangarhar's Behsud district, a combined Afghan and NATO force killed one Afghan and wounded another during an operation tar-getting a Taliban facilitator who provided logistical support and weapons to insurgents in the area, NATO said in a statement Monday. Two suspected insurgents were detained. The statement did not make clear whether the man killed was a suspected insurgent.

Afghanistan's eastern border with Pakistan is a particular source of concern for NATO. The area is rife with militant activity, including the al-Qaida and Taliban-linked Haqqani network that operates from what Afghan and coalition officials say are safe havens in Pakistan. Also in the east, NATO said an Afghan male was shot dead by a joint coalition-Afghan force after he failed to comply with orders and "displayed hostile intent toward the security force." The incident occurred as the troops were searching for a Haqqani facilitator in Badakshan province's Argo district, NATO said.

Defiant Carlos the Jackal goes on trial in France

PARIS (AP)—A defiant and smiling Carlos the Jackal, one of the most dreaded terror masterminds of the Cold War, has gone on trial again—this time over four deadly attacks in France nearly three decades ago.

The 62-year-old Venezuelan, whose real name is Ilich Ramirez Sanchez, went before a special Paris court on terrorism-linked charges Monday. He is already serving a life sentence handed down for a triple murder in 1975.

Ramirez, who sowed fear across Western European and Middle Eastern capitals during the Cold War, is charged with instigating four attacks in 1982 and 1983 that killed 11 people and injured more than 140 others in France.

He has denied any role in the attacks. The trial is expected to last six weeks, and if convicted, Ramirez could face a second life sentence—the top penalty in France, which does not have the death penalty. Wearing a blue jacket, graying beard and wavy hair brushed back, Ramirez smiled as he entered and then identified himself to the court as “a professional revolutionary”—striking a combative pose from the outset.

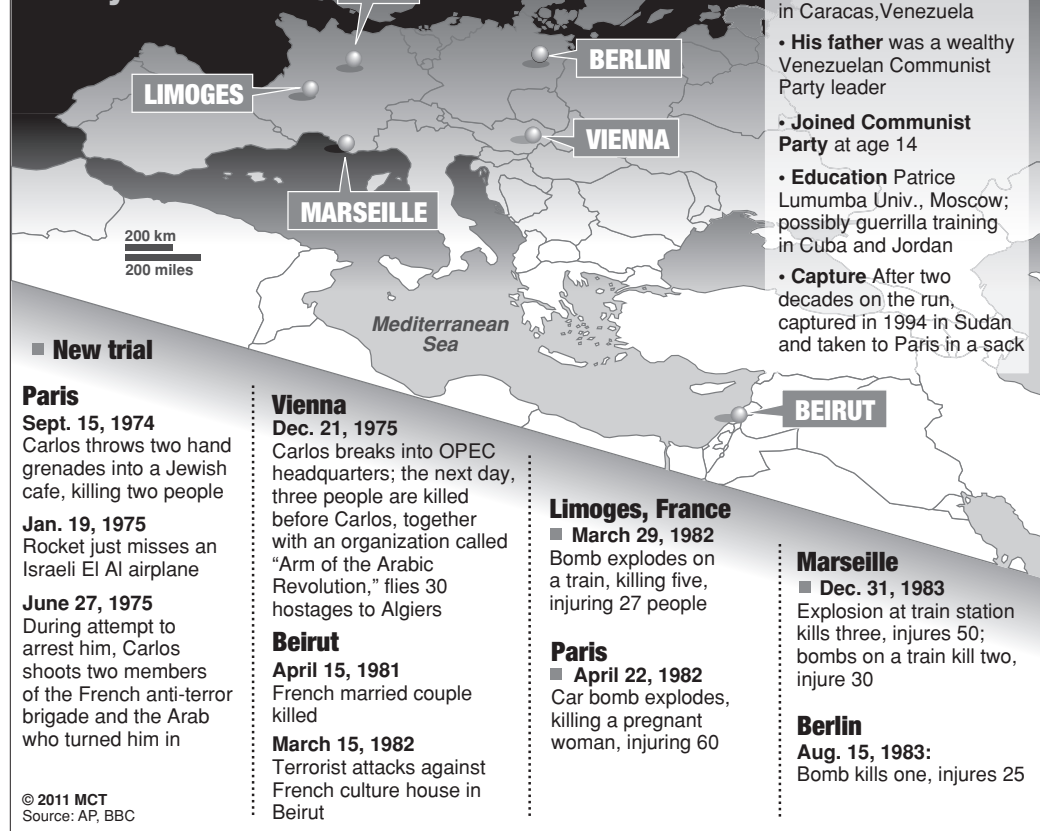

With three gendarmes at his side and dark sunglasses in his hands, Ramirez variously raised a fist in defiance, weaved in anti-Zionist rhetoric into his diatribes and smiled to the gallery that included controversial French comic Dieudonné.

“He’s in a fighting mood as always,” Isabelle Coutant-

Carlos the Jackal

Already serving a life sentence in France since 1997, Ilich Ramirez Sanchez, the terrorist known as Carlos “The Jackal,” is again on trial in Paris. He was accused of killing 83 people during his terrorist campaign. The new trial focuses on four attacks in France in 1982 and 1983. Some of the acts authorities say he was involved in:

The Jackal's bloody trail

Peyre, Ramirez’s lawyer and amorous partner, told reporters outside the courtroom before the trial began. She said there was “no reason” for the trial nearly 30 years after the events, and accused French prosecutors of putting him on trial for “propaganda or some other interests rather than the ones of justice.”

But Francis Szpiner, the lawyer for some civil parties to the case, countered that the trial was important to show that terrorists will always be pursued and to mark “the end of the culture of impunity” for them.

The trial centers on four bombings: Two against French trains, another at a Paris office of an Arabic-language newspaper and yet another at a French cultural center in then-West Berlin.

Those bombings came at least seven years after what French investigators consider was Ramirez’s first heyday—eight attacks over two years starting in December 1973.

Ramirez is serving a life sentence for the 1975 murders of two French secret agents and an alleged informer. He was also the chief suspect in the 1975 hostage-taking of OPEC oil ministers that left three people dead.

French prosecutors claim two attacks in 1982 were carried out to pressure the government to free his girlfriend Magdalena Kopp—with whom he later married and had a daughter—and comrade Bruno Breguet.

Five people were killed in the March 1982 bombing of a Toulouse-Paris train—four five days after a deadline for the release of Kopp and Breguet sent in a letter to France’s Embassy in the Netherlands. The letter allegedly contained two fingerprints of Ramirez.

Scores were injured and a young girl was killed the next month in a bombing outside the newspaper office—the day Kopp and Breguet went on trial in another case. Both were convicted.

In Venezuela, dozens of Ramirez’s supporters protested in a Caracas plaza on Monday, chanting: “He’s not a terrorist! He’s a communist!”

The demonstrators, including Venezuelan Communist Party activists and others, held signs reading “Freedom for Carlos” and “Repatriation for Carlos,” along with a banner picturing both Ramirez and Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez.

Ramirez’s younger brother Vladimir Ramirez led the protest outside a Venezuelan Foreign Ministry building, saying he doesn’t expect a fair trial in France. He urged Chavez’s government to intervene and demand that Ramirez’s rights be respected.

“A trial isn’t beginning today,” he told the crowd, speaking through a megaphone. “Ilich was already tried by the film ‘Carlos’ and was already tried by a partial French system.”

“It’s simply an official ceremony to finally slap Ilich with 30 more years of prison ... and condemn him to die imprisoned,” Ramirez’s brother said.

He said Ramirez was “a legitimate internationalist fighter for the Palestinian cause.”

Ramirez allegedly took hijackings, bombings and killings in mercenary style, with links for years to causes like the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine and in far-left European terror groups during the latter post-World War II years of political, military and economic tensions between the communist and Western worlds.

Safe havens grew scarce and allies turned dubious for Ramirez once the world was upended by the fall of communism in 1989. French secret agents snatched him from his refuge in Khartoum, Sudan, on Aug. 14, 1994, and spirited him to Paris in a sack.

He was convicted and sentenced to life in prison three years later.

Syrian troops storm Homs district in new bloodshed

BEIRUT (AP)—Syrian troops stormed a restive neighborhood in Homs on Monday, kicking in doors and making house-to-house arrests in an area that has spiraled out of government control after nearly a week of deadly assaults, activists said.

The regime is scrambling to clear out Baba Amr, a major center of resistance and reprisal, as Damascus faces potential fallout from the Arab League for defying a peace plan brokered by the 22-nation body with persistent violence. According to activists, more than 110 people have been reported killed in the past week in Homs, Syria’s third-largest city.

The Arab League scheduled an emergency meeting in Cairo on Saturday. It was not clear what action the league would take if the bloodshed continues, although it could isolate Syria by suspending or freezing its membership. That would be a major symbolic blow to a nation that prides itself on being a powerhouse of Arab nationalism.

Despite increasing international pressure, President Bashar Assad still has a firm grip on power and has shown no signs of moving to stop the crackdown on a nearly 8-month-old uprising against his regime. He blames the bloodshed on “armed gangs” and extremists acting out a foreign agenda to destabilize the regime, portraying himself as the lone force who can ward off the radicalism and sectarianism that have bedeviled neighbors in Iraq and Lebanon.

The government reportedly has been facing strong resistance from army defectors who have taken refuge in the Baba Amr and surrounding areas in Homs, which has a population of some 800,000 and is some 100 miles (160 kilometers) north of the capital, Damascus.

A key opposition group, the Syrian National Council, declared the city a “disaster area” on Monday and appealed for international intervention to protect civilians and for sending Arab and international observers to oversee the situation on the ground.

In Washington, State Department spokeswoman Victoria Nuland said that the “vast majority” of Syrians want a peaceful resolution without foreign interference.

The violence comes despite claims by Syria that it is complying with an Arab League-sponsored plan to end the crackdown.

Under the plan, Syria’s government agreed to pull tanks and armored vehicles out of cities, release political prisoners and allow journalists and rights groups into the country. But the violence has continued unabated, prompting Qatar’s prime minister to call for an emergency meeting Saturday to discuss Damascus’ failure to abide by its commitments.

Activists and Homs residents say government forces have fired live ammunition to break up unarmed protests and used tank guns and other heavy weapons in residential areas in recent days. At least two people were killed in the city and the surrounding province on Monday, pushing the death toll from the past 24 hours to at least 18, they said.

The British-based Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said Monday’s dead included an 8-year-old girl who died in random gunfire from a security checkpoint in the Houla district.

The latest siege also was preventing medical supplies and food from getting into Homs, the SNC said.

“The Syrian regime is imposing a brutal siege on the brave city of Homs, aiming to break the will of its residents who have dared to reject the regime’s authority,” the SNC said in a statement.

It was not immediately clear whether the government had retaken control in Homs. Activists reached by telephone said many people had fled before the raids while others were too scared to leave their homes.

“There is a major campaign of arrests going on in some of the toughest neighborhoods of the district,” an activist in Homs told The Associated Press by telephone. He spoke on condition of anonymity out of fear for his personal safety.

The government has largely sealed off the country from foreign journalists and prevented independent reporting, making it difficult to confirm events on the ground. Key sources of information are amateur videos posted online and details gathered by activist groups.

The conflict is strangling the country. The U.N. estimates some 3,000 people have been killed in the crackdown since mid-March, and international sanctions are eroding the economy.

Syria’s ambassador to Egypt and the Arab League, Youssef Ahmed, said he was “astonished” by comments made earlier this week by Arab League chief Nabil Elaraby, in which he warned that the failure of the Arab plan would have disastrous consequences.

Nicaragua’s Ortega re-elected in a landslide

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP)—President and one-time Sandinista revolutionary Daniel Ortega was re-elected in a landslide, according to results released Monday, overcoming a constitutional limit on re-election and reports of voting problems. Ortega had 63 percent support compared to 31 percent for his nearest challenger, Fabio Gadea, with 86 percent of the votes counted. Former President Arnoldo Aleman was a distant third with 6 percent. The size of Ortega’s margin of victory is likely to reduce the impact of reports of irregularities during Sunday’s vote.

Deadly riot breaks out in Liberia day before vote

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP)—Violence broke out at opposition headquarters, killing at least one person hours before Liberia’s presidential runoff on Tuesday, a vote that tests the West African nation’s fragile peace after a devastating civil war. Despite sharp criticism from the United States, the U.N. and election monitors, opposition leader Winston Tubman kept urging supporters to boycott Tuesday’s runoff. Demonstrators clashed with police in one rally backing the boycott, leaving one young man dead inside the headquarters of the opposition Congress for Democratic Change, or CDC, party. Nearby, four others were screaming in pain from what appeared to be bullet wounds in their legs.

Bolivia, US restore full diplomatic ties

LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP)—Bolivia and the United States agreed Monday to restore full diplomatic ties three years after the Andean nation’s leftist government expelled the U.S. ambassador and the Drug Enforcement Administration for allegedly inciting the opposition. The two nations signed a joint framework agreement in Washington, D.C. that a U.S. official familiar with the document said seeks both to mend frayed relations and return ambassadors to the respective capitals as soon as possible. The agreement’s “objectives include strengthening and deepening” relations, according to a joint statement from the governments, including “supporting cooperative and effective action against illicit narcotics production and trafficking.”

Paralyzed man uses mind-powered robot arm to touch

By LAURAN NEERGAARD
AP MEDICAL WRITER

PITTSBURGH (AP)—Giving a high-five. Rubbing his girlfriend's hand. Such ordinary acts—but a milestone for a paralyzed man.

True, a robotic arm parked next to his wheelchair did the touching, painstakingly, palm to palm. But Tim Hemmes made that arm move just by thinking about it.

Emotions surged. For the first time in the seven years since a motorcycle accident left him a quadriplegic, Hemmes was reaching out to someone—even if it was only temporary, part of a month-long science experiment at the University of Pittsburgh.

"It wasn't my arm but it was my brain, my thoughts. I was moving something," Hemmes says. "I don't have one single word to give you what I felt at that moment. That word doesn't exist."

The Pennsylvania man is among the pioneers in an ambitious quest for thought-controlled prosthetics to give the paralyzed more independence—the ability to feed themselves, turn a door-knob, hug a loved one.

The goal is a Star Trek-like melding of mind and machine, combining what's considered the most human-like bionic arm to date—even the fingers bend like real ones—with tiny chips implanted in the brain. Those electrodes tap into electrical signals from brain cells that command movement. Bypassing a broken spinal cord, they relay those signals to the robotic third arm.

This research is years away from commercial use, but numerous teams are investigating different methods.

At Pittsburgh, monkeys learned to feed themselves marshmallows by thinking a robot arm into motion. At Duke University, monkeys used their thoughts to move virtual arms on a computer and got feedback that let them distinguish the texture of what they "touched."

Through a project known as BrainGate and other research, a few paralyzed people outfitted with brain electrodes have used their minds to work computers, even make simple movements with prosthetic arms.

But can these neuroprosthetics ever offer the complex, rapid movements that people would need for more practical, everyday use?

"We really are at a tipping point now with this technology," says Michael McLoughlin of the Johns Hopkins University Applied Physics Laboratory, which developed the humanlike arm in a $100 million project for DARPA, the Pentagon's research agency.

Pittsburgh is helping to lead a closely watched series of government-funded studies over the next two years to try to find out. A handful of quadriplegic volunteers will train their brains to operate the DARPA arm in increasingly sophisticated ways, even using sensors implanted in its fingertips to try to feel what they touch, while scientists explore which electrodes work best.

"Imagine all the joints that are in your hand. There's 20 motions around all those joints," says Pittsburgh neurobiologist Andrew Schwartz. "It's not just reaching out and crudely grasping something. We want them to be able to use the fingers we've worked so hard on."

The 30-year-old Hemmes' task was a much simpler first step. He was testing whether a new type of chip, which for safety reasons the Food and Drug Administration let stay on this initial volunteer's brain for just a month, could allow for three-dimensional arm movement.

He surprised researchers the day before the electrodes were removed. The robotic arm whirled as Hemmes' mind pushed it forward to hesitantly tap palms with a scientist. Then his girlfriend beckoned. The room abruptly hushed. Hemmes painstakingly raised the black metal hand again and slowly rubbed its palm against hers a few times.

These emotional robotic touches have inspired researchers now recruiting volunteers for soon-to-start year-long experiments.

"It was awesome," is the decidedly unscientific description from the normally reserved Dr. Michael Boninger, rehabilitation chief at the University of Pittsburgh Medical Center. "To interact with a human that way. ... This is the beginning."

Hemmes' journey began in 2004. He owned an auto-detailing shop and rode his motorcycle in his spare time. Then one summer evening he swerved to miss a deer. His bike struck a guardrail. His neck snapped.

His determination didn't. Paralyzed below the shoulders, he's tried other experimental procedures in hopes, so far unrealized, of regaining some arm function.

"I always tell people your legs are great ... but they just get you from here to there," Hemmes says as his caregiver waits to feed him a bite of a cheeseburger near his home in Butler, north of Pittsburgh. "Your arms and fingers and hands do everything else. I have to get those back, I absolutely have to."

His ultimate goal is to hug his 8-year-old daughter. "I'm going to do whatever it takes, as long as it takes, to do that again."

Hemmes entered an operating room at UPMC with a mix of nerves and excitement.

"It's good anxiety," he says. "There is so much riding on this."

Think "I want that apple," and your arm reaches out and grasps it. You're not aware that neurons are instantaneously firing in patterns that send commands down the spinal cord—make the shoulder raise the arm, extend the elbow, flex the wrist and all five fingers.

A very similar firing occurs when you imagine movement or watch the movement you'd like to perform, explains Boninger, who with Schwartz is leading the Pittsburgh research together with a team of bioengineers, neuroscientists and physicians.

The DARPA arm was developed primarily for amputees. Separate research is under way to help them move it by using transplanted nerves to sense those brain commands. The paralyzed pose a more difficult challenge: getting those signals around a broken spinal cord.

For quadriplegic patients, scientists use implanted electrodes, called a "brain-computer interface" or BCI, to record that electrical activity. The signals move down through wires that tunnel under the skin and out by the collarbone, and are plugged into a computer or a robotic arm.

Until now, researchers mostly have tested miniature electrodes that poke inside the brain's motor cortex and record from individual cells, presumably allowing for precise movements. Pittsburgh's next test-patient will have two penetrating grids implanted in different parts of the cortex for a year to record from 200 cells altogether.

In contrast, Hemmes' chip sat on the surface of his motor cortex, a less invasive method that records from groups of cells. The size of two postage stamps, it's based on a kind of electrical signal mapping used to track seizures in epilepsy patients.

Both approaches need study, says Daofen Chen of the National Institutes of Health, who oversees neurorehabilitation research. He compares the options to eavesdropping on a party by sending in individual microphones or setting up a recorder at the window.

Boninger adds that scar tissue can blunt the penetrating electrodes over time, and the surface chips may be easier to convert to a wireless system, which is important for commercial use.

Hemmes' operation took two hours. He had practiced imagining arm movements inside brain scanners, to see where the electrical signals concentrated. That's where neurosurgeon Elizabeth Tyler-Kabara cut, attaching the chip through an inch-wide opening on the left side of Hemmes' skull.

Two days later, Hemmes was hooked to a computer, beginning simple cursor movements. The next week, it was time to test if he could trigger real-life movement using the DARPA arm.

Hemmes reclined in his wheelchair, the robot arm bolted to a steel rod nearby. The task: make the arm reach out to grasp a ball mounted on a board.

The arm whirs forward, then stops, then goes again, then suddenly pulls back.

"It's doing the opposite of what I ask it do," Hemmes says in frustration. "When I think about reaching back, it goes forward."

Dr. Wei Wang, a member of the research team, watches Hemmes' brain patterns on a nearby computer screen, trying to match them to the robotic movements. Focus on your elbow, Wang advises.

Hemmes takes a deep breath and tries. The arm whirs forward this time, reaching the ball. The fingers clench around it.

"There's no owner's manual," Hemmes says, thrilled that the back-and-forth pays off. "I'm training my brain to figure how to do all this."

Letting go is harder, the motor growling as the arm tugs backward before the fingers fully release. Hemmes starts imagining his hand relaxing before pulling backward, and the robot hand follows.

Sure, a robotic hand that one day mounts to a wheelchair could be useful. But no matter how well today's prosthetics move, they've got a problem: They don't sense what they touch. Normally, instant messages flash from the skin up to the brain to say "squeeze tighter" so we don't drop that coffee cup, or "tight enough" so we don't hug too hard.

Besides, Hemmes shares the dream of many quadriplegics. He doesn't want a bionic third hand. He wants to move his own hands again.

"These are all scientific goals that are very real," Boninger says.

Recreating sensation means crafting a two-way highway with those brain chips. That's what Duke University, in a study published last week in the journal Nature, did with its two monkeys. When the animals "touched" objects on a computer screen with their video game-like arms, electrical signals flashed back up to implanted electrodes—different signals for different textures, to tell the objects apart.

Sensors in the DARPA arm's fingertips allow for that same kind of feedback. McLoughlin says the plan is for one of the Pittsburgh study patients to begin testing touch capability next year, with a similar attempt at the California Institute of Technology to follow.

What about moving paralyzed limbs? Duke's plan is to turn its research into a robotic exoskeleton that would help the paralyzed move their bodies.

Hemmes is more intrigued by what's called functional electrical stimulation, zapping muscles with electrical currents to make them move. At Hemmes' request, Boninger's team attempted to fit his hand with a stimulator glove that might be linked to his electrode, but it was unsuccessful. The NIH's Chen says still other researchers are working on that kind of approach.

Hemmes likened moving the DARPA arm to learning to drive a car with a manual transmission. It took practice, but by week four he was moving the arm sideways as well as back and forth.

The fingers still clenched pretty tight, though. So when his girlfriend Katie Schaffer spoke up—"I want to hold your hand," she said on his last day of testing—Hemmes didn't dare bend them.

The two met after his accident, so he'd never before reached out to her.

"I was just trying to be gentle. I didn't want to hurt her, and I finally got there," Hemmes says. "Definitely the tears were flowing."

He says he was ready for a break after almost daily scientific testing, so removing the electrode and wires the next day wasn't a disappointment. He's confident the researchers will call him back once the technology advances.

"I believe this is the future," he says. "Just let people know there's hope."

US school kids showing slight improvement in math

WASHINGTON (AP)—Some progress. Still needs improvement.

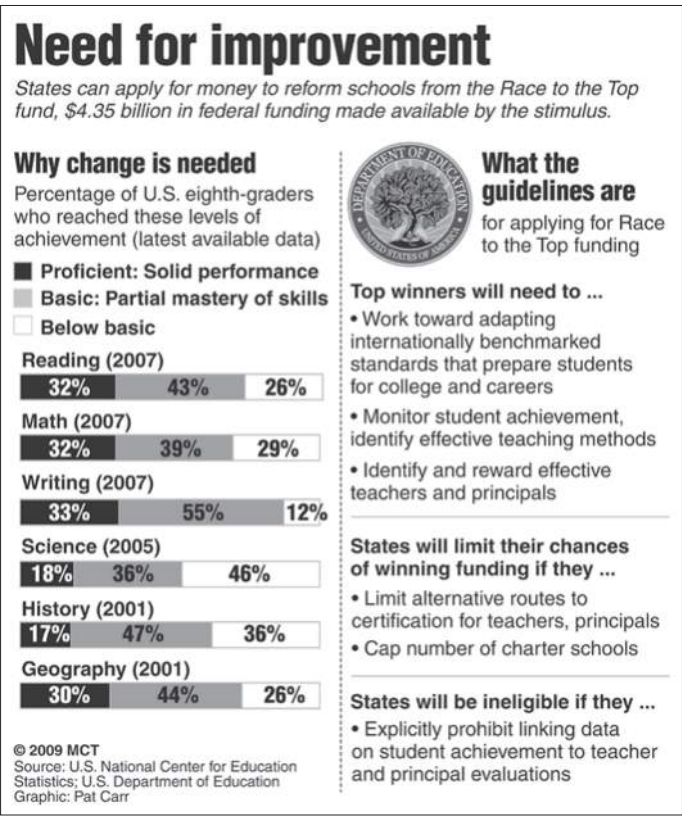

The nation's report card on math and reading shows fourth- and eighth-graders scoring their best ever in math and eighth graders making some progress in reading. But the results released Tuesday are a stark reminder of just how far the nation's school kids are from achieving the No Child Left Behind law's goal that every child in America be proficient in math and reading by 2014.

Just a little more than one-third of the students were proficient or higher in reading. In math, 40 percent of the fourth-graders and 35 percent of the eighth-graders had reached that level.

The figures were from the National Assessment of Educational Progress.

"The modest increases in NAEP scores are reason for concern as much as optimism," said Education Secretary Arne Duncan. "It's clear that achievement is not accelerating fast enough for our nation's children to compete in the knowledge economy of the 21st century."

There were few noticeable changes in the achievement gap between white and black

Jackson doctor convicted in star's drug death

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Michael Jackson's doctor was convicted Monday of involuntary manslaughter in the pop star's death for supplying an insomnia-plagued Jackson with a powerful operating-room anesthetic to help him sleep as he rehearsed for his big comeback.

Dr. Conrad Murray, 58, sat stone-faced, his chin held high, as he heard the verdict that could send him to prison for up to four years and cost him his license to practice medicine. He was handcuffed and immediately led off to jail without bail to await sentencing Nov. 29.

The verdict marked the latest chapter in one of pop culture's most shocking tragedies—the 2009 drug-overdose death of the King of Pop at age 50 as he was about to mount a series of heavily promoted concerts in London that he hoped would turn his career around after a slide prompted by child-molestation allegations and years of bizarre behavior.

A shriek broke the silence in the packed courtroom when the jury's decision was read, and the crowd outside the courthouse erupted in cheers. Jubilant Jackson fans sang "Beat It" and held signs that read "Guilty" and "Killer." Drivers honked their horns.

Members of Jackson's family wept, and his mother, Katherine Jackson, said, "I feel better now." His sister La Toya said she was overjoyed and added: "Michael was looking over us."

Members of the jury were escorted from the building and not available for comment. Murray's lawyers also left without saying anything.

The jury deliberated less than nine hours after a six-week trial that depicted Jackson as a tormented genius on the brink of what might have been his greatest triumph but for one impediment—extreme insomnia.

Prosecutors portrayed Murray as an incompetent doctor who administered propofol—an extremely potent anesthetic normally used during surgery—in Jackson's bedroom without adequate safeguards and botched his care when things went wrong.

Murray, who did not testify, told police that he administered only a small dose on the day Jackson died. And his lawyers blamed Jackson for his own death, saying the singer gave himself an extra, lethal dose while Murray wasn't watching.

Prosecutors said that theory was crazy, and in any case, they argued, Murray should not have left Jackson alone.

The jury was not asked to determine whether Murray actually gave Jackson the fatal dose, only whether he was primarily responsible for the singer's death.

Deputy District Attorney David Walgren extended his sympathies to the Jackson family, who "lost not a pop icon, but a son and a father."

In Las Vegas, a former Murray patient and current friend, Donna DiGiacomo, sobbed and said the jury was under "overwhelming pressure to convict."

"This man didn't deserve this. They needed a scapegoat," said DiGiacomo, a former Long Island, N.Y., teacher's aide who said she didn't believe Murray did anything to intentionally harm Jackson.

Testimony came from medical experts, household employees and Murray's former girlfriends, among others. The most shocking moments, however, came when prosecutors displayed a large picture of Jackson's gaunt, lifeless body on a hospital gurney and played his drugged, slurred voice, as recorded by Murray just weeks before the singer's death.

Jackson talked about his hope of cementing a legacy larger than that of Elvis Presley or the Beatles.

"We have to be phenomenal," he said about his "This Is It" concerts in London. "When people leave this show, when people leave my show, I want them to say, 'I've never seen nothing like this in my life. Go. Go. I've never seen nothing like this. Go. It's amazing. He's the greatest entertainer in the world.'"

Craving sleep, Jackson had searched for a doctor who would give him the intravenous propofol that Jackson called his "milk" and believed to be his salvation. Other medical professionals turned him down, according to testimony.

Prosecutors said Murray abandoned his medical judgment for money: According to testimony, Jackson planned to pay the cardiologist $150,000 a month for an extended tour in Europe.

Murray gave up his practices in Houston and Las Vegas and agreed to travel with Jackson and be his personal physician indefinitely. For six weeks, as Jackson undertook strenuous rehearsals, Murray infused him with propofol every night, the doctor told police. He said he later tried to wean Jackson from the drug because he feared he was becoming addicted.

In the end, the doctor was never paid a penny because Jackson died before signing a contract with Murray.

The circumstances of Jackson's death on June 25, 2009, were as bizarre as any chapter in the superstar's sensational life story.

During the last 24 hours of his life, Jackson sang and danced at a spirited rehearsal, reveling in the adulation of fans who greeted him outside. Testimony showed Murray gave Jackson intravenous doses that night of the sedatives lorazepam and midazolam. Jackson also took a Valium pill. But nothing seemed to bring sleep.

Finally, Murray told police, he gave the singer a small dose of propofol—25 milligrams—that seemed to put him to sleep. The doctor said he felt it was safe to leave his patient's bedside for a few minutes, but Jackson was not breathing when he returned. Witnesses said he was most likely dead at that point.

QUOTE BOX

Reaction to Monday's involuntary manslaughter conviction of Dr. Conrad Murray in the death of Michael Jackson:

■ "Michael was looking over us."—Jackson's sister La Toya Jackson speaking to an Associated Press reporter on the way out of the courtroom.

■ "I feel better now." Jackson's mother, Katherine Jackson, who says she was confident this would be the outcome of the trial.

■ "Justice was done," family patriarch Joe Jackson as he was leaving the courthouse.

■ "Absolutely justice was served," La Toya Jackson upon leaving the courthouse.

■ "This man didn't deserve this. They needed a scapegoat."—Former Murray patient and current friend, Donna DiGiacomo, 53, in Las Vegas. DiGiacomo sobbed as she spoke of the verdict and what she said she thought was "overwhelming pressure to convict."

■ "I think that unfortunately, because of AB109, that a completely potentially failed system is now in place. It will be very difficult to achieve an appropriate sentence of incarceration for Dr. Conrad Murray."—Los Angeles County District Attorney Steve Cooley, in a post-verdict news conference, referring to California's prison realignment program, which makes it unlikely that Murray will receive the maximum four-year prison term.

■ "Our sympathies go out to the Jackson family at this time for the loss that they have suffered—not a pop icon but a son and a brother—and I think that's the most important thing to keep in mind today."—Deputy District Attorney David Walgren, in a post-verdict news conference.

■ "The defense lawyers should be cited for misrepresenting the truth about Michael's Demerol use and the deliberate misinterpretation of my medical records which caused confusion and wrongly placed blame on me. Put simply they lied. Any sentencing Murray would get would be less than if he had stolen my car. It's time to find out who allowed this incompetent individual to be Michael Jackson's doctor."—Dr. Arnold Klein, Jackson's longtime dermatologist, who was an element in the trial although he wasn't charged with any wrongdoing and wasn't a witness.

■ "Certainly I feel that more punishment could and should have been served but I am pleased that this jury didn't blame Michael for his own death. ... I feel that Dr. Murray and others who benefited from Michael but didn't protect him got off relatively lightly. Michael lost his life and we lost one of the greatest entertainers that ever lived. I lost a friend and will never forget him."—Rev. Al Sharpton, a friend of the Jackson family.

■ "The Estate of Michael Jackson and Michael himself has always believed the jury system works and despite the tragedy that brought about this trial we are in agreement with the jury's verdict. In this case justice has been served. Michael is missed on a daily basis but his genius and his music will be with us forever."—Jackson's estate.

■ "Dr. Murray murdered Michael Jackson and the world now sees that. This (verdict) means more to me than anything. I'm ecstatic."—Jackson fan Tina Masters, 41, of Long Beach, standing outside the courtroom.

■ "It's just a big sigh of relief. This is a big day and one we won't forget."—Jackson supporter Robby Reverb, 49, outside the courthouse.

Lindsay Lohan checks in and out of LA County jail

LYNWOOD, Calif. (AP)—Lindsay Lohan was released from a Los Angeles County jail early Monday, less than five hours after she arrived at the crowded women's lockup to serve a 30-day sentence for violating probation.

The "Mean Girls" actress was booked into the Century Regional Detention facility in Lynwood at 8:48 p.m. Sunday, in what was expected to be a short stay because of jail overcrowding. She was released at 1:35 a.m., county sheriff's spokesman Steve Whitmore said.

News crews staking out the jail said she left in a black Cadillac Escalade sport utility vehicle, and that she was in her Venice home by 2 a.m.

Lohan did not get any favors, Whitmore said.

"She's treated like every other inmate who has gone through similar circumstances," he said. Lohan had until Nov. 9 to report to the jail. It's Lohan's fifth jail sentence since being arrested twice for drunken driving in 2007.

Her brief return to jail came after Lohan completed an interview and photo shoot for Playboy magazine that will appear in the January/February issue, her spokesman Steve Honig wrote in an email Monday.

On Wednesday, a judge ordered jail time because Lohan recently violated court orders by getting booted from a community service assignment at a women's shelter.

The judge imposed a complicated sentence, telling Lohan that she will now have to perform all of her community service at the county morgue or risk serving an additional 270 days in jail.

Lohan will have to serve 423 hours at the county morgue, where for nearly two weeks she has been mopping floors, cleaning bathrooms and washing dirty sheets.

The sentence also requires Lohan to undergo psychotherapy sessions and appear monthly at court hearings between December and March.

The judge also said Lohan can no longer leave the country and needs the permission of her new "no-nonsense" probation officer to travel outside California. Jail overcrowding has led to significantly shortened jail terms.

In 2007, Lohan spent 84 minutes at the jail before being released, and in the past she has served about 20 percent of her sentence, which is roughly six days.

"The longer the sentence, the longer you stay in jail," Whitmore said.

"As pathetic as it sounds, this is not necessarily special treatment," said Adam H. Braun, a defense attorney who was not involved in the case. "It just depends how full the jail is when someone surrenders. If it is filled to capacity or nearly full, offenders like her are the first ones let go so more serious offenders can be held."

"Even so, she was not likely to do more than 20 percent of the 30 days under the jail crowding formulas being used because her offense was not a crime of violence," he added in an email.

'Bieber will take paternity test'

ATLANTA (AP)—Justin Bieber will take a paternity test and then he plans to sue the woman who has filed a paternity suit against him, a representative for the teen pop star said Monday.

Matthew Hiltzik said the 17-year-old singer will take a paternity test when he returns to the U.S. within the next two weeks. He also said Bieber's team plans to "vigorously pursue all available legal remedies to protect Justin."

The paternity suit was filed last week in San Diego Superior Court by Mariah Yeater. She said she had just turned 19 when she and Bieber, then 16, had a brief sexual encounter after one of the singer's concerts last fall in a backstage bathroom at Los Angeles' Staples Center.

Bieber has said he's never met Yeater and has denied allegations that he fathered Yeater's 3-month-old child.

The singer was in London Monday where Bieber fever raged from the west end to the east Monday, as the pop star switched on the Christmas lights at the city's two biggest shopping malls.

Thousands of young and mostly female fans waited hours for Bieber to appear, first at the Westfield shopping center in west London, then hours later at the new Westfield Stratford City mall near the 2012 Olympic Park in the east. Bieber traveled the 12 miles between the malls by helicopter.

The star, who won two prizes at Sunday's MTV Europe Music Awards in Belfast, told fans that his favorite thing about London was "all the girls."

Bieber, dressed in a gray woolen hat and black leather jacket, said backstage Monday that despite the ups and downs, he was grateful for his fans.

"I take it with a grain of salt. It's been incredible, my fans are amazing and I wouldn't have it any other way," he said.

Brody Jenner, Avril Lavigne report assault

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Reality TV star Brody Jenner says he was hit with a bottle outside the Hollywood Roosevelt Hotel, and girlfriend singer Avril Lavigne tweeted that she was also attacked.

Los Angeles police Sgt. Keith Green said Monday that Jenner filed a police report of assault with a deadly weapon after being hit early Sunday outside the popular nightspot.

Green says Jenner was not given medical help and no one was arrested.

Green could not confirm Lavigne's involvement, but on her Twitter account, she said she "got attacked by 5 people last night out of nowhere. Not cool."

Jenner is the son of Olympian Bruce Jenner and a regular on MTV's "The Hills." He's also a stepbrother of the Kardashian sisters and has appeared on their reality show.

Singer Adele has vocal cord surgery in Boston

BOSTON (AP)—Adele has undergone throat surgery to stop a recurrent condition that caused her to cancel tour dates and promotional appearances for the rest of the year.

A spokesman for Massachusetts General Hospital says the British singer underwent vocal cord microsurgery to stop recurrent bleeding from a benign polyp. The condition is usually the result of unstable blood vessels in the vocal cord that can rupture.

The hospital says the 23-year-old Grammy winner came to Boston to undergo the surgery with Dr. Steven Zeitels, director of the Massachusetts General Hospital Voice Center. The hospital says Zeitels expects Adele to make a full recovery from the laser microsurgery.

Columbia Records announced last month that the "Rolling in the Deep" singer would have throat surgery.

Kelly Osbourne out of hospital after head injury

MIAMI (AP)—Media personality and reality star Kelly Osbourne says she has been released from a Miami hospital after being treated for a head injury.

The 27-year-old E! Fashion Police co-host Tweeted on Sunday that she was given the "all clear" and was released from Mercy Hospital, which declined comment Monday.

The nature of the injury and how Osbourne was hurt were not immediately clear. She tweeted that she had cracked her head open, though her publicist has not released any details.

Osbourne was in Miami attending a model casting call for Madonna's Material Girl clothing line.

Osbourne found fame after appearing on the reality series "The Osbournes" alongside her family, including rock star Ozzy Osbourne. She has recorded several albums and appeared on "Dancing with the Stars" in 2009.

Young TV actor Loder charged in NC burglary effort

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP)—Actor Keson Mitchell Loder, whose television credits include "CSI" and "ER," faces a court hearing in Wilmington on charges he attempted a burglary at a mobile phone store. The StarNews of Wilmington reported that the 18-year-old was arrested on charges of attempted breaking and entering, possession of burglary tools and carrying a concealed weapon. Loder's acting stage name is K'Sun Ray. Superior Court records in New Hanover County indicate a court hearing is scheduled next week. It was not clear Monday whether he has an attorney. Police say Loder was arrested last month after cutting an alarm system cable and trying to enter a mobile phone store through a side door. Employees confronted Loder and he ran away, but was caught by a police officer.

Miller, Cumberbatch vie for London theater prize

LONDON (AP)—"Frankenstein" co-stars Jonny Lee Miller and Benedict Cumberbatch are competing for the best actor prize at London's Evening Standard Theater Awards. They alternated the roles of Victor Frankenstein and his monstrous creature in director Danny Boyle's production. They're up against Bertie Carvel for "Matilda: The Musical" and Charles Edwards for "Much Ado About Nothing." Best actress contenders announced Monday are Kristin Scott Thomas for "Betrayal," Samantha Spiro for "Chicken Soup With Barley" and Sheridan Smith for "Flare Path." Best-play finalists are Gina Gionfriddo's "Becky Shaw," "Tribes" by Nina Raine and two plays by Richard Bean - climate-change comedy "The Heretic" and knockabout farce "One Man, Two Guvnors." Winners will be announced Nov. 20.

Noise from guest bedroom leaves hosts speechless

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
UNIVERSAL PRESS SYNDICATE

DEAR ABBY: My son invited two friends to our home for the weekend. We had never met them before, but they seemed nice.

At bedtime, the young man was on the couch and the girl was in our spare bedroom. In the middle of the night, I was awakened to loud love-making noises. They grew louder and louder, and the headboard was banging against our bedroom wall.

My husband and I were mortified. Finally, I banged on the wall and it stopped. We couldn't believe these kids would act that way in someone's home.

They left before breakfast, so we didn't have to face them in the morning. What was proper here? Would it have been appropriate to knock on the bedroom door and ask the guy—or both of them—to leave?

I told my son about it the next day. He was embarrassed and apologized for his friends. What should we do if this ever happens again?

RED-FACED IN MICHIGAN

DEAR RED-FACED: Unless you first required your son's friends to sign an abstinence pledge before bedding down at your place, you were right not to have evicted them before morning. Next time, keep this from happening by having your son tip them off at bedtime that you're light sleepers and prefer not to be awakened by "nocturnal whoopee."

DEAR ABBY: When I'm reading a book, my husband chooses that moment to begin a conversation. If I don't immediately put it down and give him my full attention, he gets upset and says I'm being rude to continue reading and not talk to him.

I think it's rude of HIM to interrupt me when I'm reading. These aren't important conversations or even questions he needs immediate answers to. They are conversations we could easily share over dinner, or later when I'm not reading.

I love to read, but as a busy mom I rarely have the time. Being interrupted during those rare moments drives me crazy and makes me feel even crazier when I'm accused of being rude if I don't want to chat right then. Who's right and who's rude?

TRYING TO FINISH MY BOOK

DEAR TRYING TO FINISH: Frankly, I think your husband is right. He may not need the answer to his question as much as he needs your companionship at the time he's reaching out. If finishing a chapter is so important that you can't take a few minutes and talk with him, then suggest that in 15 to 20 minutes you can give him the rest of the evening to talk. If my husband is involved in a project, or I am, that's what we do, and it works for us.

DEAR ABBY: How do you handle a relative who seems to think your house is her own personal garage sale site? She rifles through my closets, brings out clothing, and then asks, "What can I pay you for this?" She also looks around our garage for items that are being stored and asks the same question.

She would never act this way at a friend's home, but somehow it's different with me. By the way, she's my sister.

NO SALE IN AUSTIN

DEAR NO SALE: Because it's your sister and not some nervy acquaintance, be light-handed in your response. Smile and say, "I'm not ready to let it go, but when I am, you'll be the first to know." Then get her out of your closet or garage and direct the conversation elsewhere.

Conceptis Sudoku

By Dave Green

Difficulty Level ★★

©2010 Conceptis Puzzles, Dist. by King Features Syndicate, Inc.

Sudoku is a number-placing puzzle based on a 9x9 grid with several given numbers. The object is to place the numbers 1 to 9 in the empty squares so that each row, each column and each 3x3 box contains the same number only once. The difficulty level of the Conceptis Sudoku increases from Monday to Saturday.

COMMONWEALTH DEVELOPMENT AUTHORITY
REQUEST FOR PROPOSAL
2011-CDA-07-RFP
LOAN UNDERWRITER

The Commonwealth Development Authority is soliciting competitive proposals from qualified firms, companies, agencies and/or persons to provide the services of a loan underwriter experienced in all aspects of the underwriting process, to provide independent contractual services for the CDA in the implementation of the State Small Business Credit Initiative (SSBCI) Loan Guaranty and Loan Participation Programs. This procurement is being conducted pursuant to CNMI Procurement Regulations (NMIAC Chapter 70-30.3, specifically § 70-30.3-235).

The CDA on behalf of the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands (CNMI) has applied for State Small Business Credit Initiative funds for the amount of $13,168,350 for Loan Participation and Loan Guaranty. Programs are subject to CDA and lender criteria as well as SSBCI guidelines.

The purpose of the programs is to provide businesses with high growth and job creation potential that will diversify and strengthen the local economy. It encourages expansion of existing and emerging new industries to expand economic opportunity to all in the community.

The Program targets the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands.

CDA encourages the leveraging of new private investment in the form of fixed asset and working capital investment. The Program provides loan guaranty and participation of up to $5 million to businesses at interest rates and loan maturities that encourage business development and facilitate reinvestment while providing for the recapitalization and growth of fund. The program perpetuates a positive and proactive business climate that encourages the retention and expansion of existing businesses and helps to attract desirable new businesses. The Program objective is to leverage the SSBCI funding ten times (10X) with private financing.

The guidelines and specifications for this RFP may be picked up at the Commonwealth Development Authority, Gualo Rai, Saipan, MP 96950 during normal working hours from 8:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m., Monday through Friday, except Holidays, or from the Office of Procurement and Supply in Lower Base.

Boxing great Joe Frazier dies after cancer fight

PHILADELPHIA

(AP)—He beat Muhammad Ali in the Fight of the Century, battled him nearly to the death in the Thrilla in Manila. Then Joe Frazier spent the rest of his life trying to fight his way out of Ali's shadow.

That was one fight Frazier never could win.

He was once a heavyweight champion, and a great one at that. Ali would say as much after Frazier knocked him down in the 15th round en route to becoming the first man to beat Ali at Madison Square Garden in March 1971.

But he bore the burden of being Ali's foil, and he paid the price. Bitter for years about the taunts his former nemesis once threw his way, Frazier only in recent times came to terms with what happened in the past and said he had forgiven Ali for everything he said.

Frazier, who died Monday night after a brief battle with liver cancer at the age of 67, will forever be linked to Ali. But no one in boxing would ever dream of anointing Ali as The Greatest unless he, too, was linked to Smokin' Joe.

"I will always remember Joe with respect and admiration," Ali said in a statement. "My sympathy goes out to his family and loved ones."

They fought three times, twice in the heart of New York City and once in the morning in a steamy arena in the Philippines. They went 41 rounds together, with neither giving an inch and both giving it their all.

In their last fight in Manila in 1975, they traded punches with a fervor that seemed unimaginable among heavyweights. Frazier gave almost as good as he got for 14 rounds, then had to be held back by trainer Eddie Futch as he tried to go out for the final round, unable to see.

"Closest thing to dying that I know of," Ali said afterward.

Ali was as merciless with Frazier out of the ring as he was inside it. He called him a gorilla, and mocked him as an Uncle Tom. But he respected him as a fighter, especially after Frazier won a decision to defend his heavyweight title against the then-unbeaten Ali in a fight that was so big Frank Sinatra was shooting pictures at ringside and both fighters earned an astonishing $2.5 million.

The night at the Garden 40 years ago remained fresh in Frazier's mind as he talked about his life, career and relationship with Ali a few months before he died.

"I can't go nowhere where it's not mentioned," he told The Associated Press. "That was the greatest thing that ever happened in my life."

Bob Arum, who once promoted Ali, said he was saddened by Frazier's passing.

"He was such an inspirational guy. A decent guy. A man of his word," Arum said. "I'm torn up by Joe dying at this relatively young age. I can't say enough about Joe."

Frazier's death was announced in a statement by his family, who asked to be able to grieve privately and said they would announce "our father's homecoming celebration" as soon as possible.

Manny Pacquiao learned of it shortly after he arrived in Las Vegas for his fight Saturday night with Juan Manuel Marquez. Like Frazier in his prime, Pacquiao has a powerful left hook that he has used in his remarkable run to stardom.

"Boxing lost a great champion, and the sport lost a great ambassador," Pacquiao said.

Don King, who promoted the Thrilla in Manila, was described by a spokesman as too upset to talk about Frazier's death.

Though slowed in his later years and his speech slurred by the toll of punches taken in the ring, Frazier was still active on the autograph circuit in the months before he died. In September he went to Las Vegas, where he signed autographs in the lobby of the MGM Grand hotel-casino shortly before Floyd Mayweather Jr.'s fight against Victor Ortiz.

An old friend, Gene Kilroy, visited with him and watched Frazier work the crowd.

"He was so nice to everybody," Kilroy said. "He would say to each of them, 'Joe Frazier, sharp as a razor, what's your name?'"

Frazier was small for a heavyweight, weighing just 205 pounds when he won the title by stopping Jimmy Ellis in the fifth round of their 1970 fight at Madison Square Garden. But he fought every minute of every round going forward behind a vicious left hook, and there were few fighters who could withstand his constant pressure.

His reign as heavyweight champion lasted only four fights—including the win over Ali—before he ran into an even more fearsome slugger than himself. George Foreman responded to Frazier's constant attack by dropping him three times in the first round and three more in the second before their 1973 fight in Jamaica was waved to a close and the world had a new heavyweight champion.

Two fights later, he met Ali in a rematch of their first fight, only this time the outcome was different. Ali won a 12-round decision, and later that year stopped George Foreman in the Rumble in the Jungle in Zaire.

There had to be a third fight, though, and what a fight it was. With Ali's heavyweight title at stake, the two met in Manila in a fight that will long be seared in boxing history.

Frazier went after Ali round after round, landing his left hook with regularity as he made Ali backpedal around the ring. But Ali responded with left jabs and right hands that found their mark again and again. Even the intense heat inside the arena couldn't stop the two as they fought every minute of every round with neither willing to concede the other one second of the round. "They told me Joe Frazier was through," Ali told Frazier at one point during the fight.

"They lied," Frazier said, before hitting Ali with a left hook.

Finally, though, Frazier simply couldn't see and Futch would not let him go out for the 15th round. Ali won the fight while on his stool, exhausted and contemplating himself whether to go on.

It was one of the greatest fights ever, but it took a toll. Frazier would fight only two more times, getting knocked out in a rematch with Foreman eight months later before coming back in 1981 for an ill-advised fight withumbo Cummings.

Twins dismiss GM Smith, return Ryan as interim

MINNEAPOLIS

(AP)—The fallout from a 99-loss season for the Minnesota Twins has started with the firing of general manager Bill Smith.

Smith was dismissed Monday, when the Twins returned Terry Ryan to the role on an interim basis. Smith was Ryan's top assistant when Ryan stepped down in 2007, citing burnout, after holding the job for 13 years.

Widely recognized for their stability, class and ability to make the most out of a medium-range payroll, this was a startling move for the Twins despite the embarrassment and deep disappointment of the 2011 season following two straight AL Central titles.

This is the first time since the franchise moved from Washington to Minnesota in 1961 the Twins have fired a general manager. Calvin Griffith was the owner and general manager until selling the team in 1984. Andy MacPhail became the fulltime successor, leaving for a prime job with the Chicago Cubs, and Ryan followed him.

Ryan's moves helped turn the Twins from one of the worst teams in baseball in the mid-90s to one of the best the next decade. They won four division titles over Ryan's last five full seasons, without spending much money in free agency and instead drafting and developing their core players.

Shrewd trades were part of his success, too, fetching Cristian Guzman and Eric Milton for Chuck Knoblauch; getting Nick Punto and Carlos Silva for Milton; and landing Francisco Liriano and Joe Nathan for A.J. Pierzynski.

Smith's decisions haven't turned out as well, dealing Johan Santana, Matt Garza, J.J. Hardy and Delmon Young for little production in return. Japanese shortstop Tsuyoshi Nishio, the headliner acquisition last winter, was hurt for much of the season and a bust at the plate and in the field.

"No one in the Twins' organization wants to win any more than Bill," Twins owner Jim Pohlad said in a statement. "He is unquestionably loyal, committed and talented. The Twins' goal is to get better in 2012 and beyond. Bill was equally motivated to achieve that goal, but we differed in the scope and approach that was required."

"They should have both retired after the Manila fight," former AP boxing writer Ed Schuyler Jr. said. "They left every bit of talent they had in the ring that day."

Born in Beaufort, S.C., on Jan. 12, 1944, Frazier took up boxing early after watching weekly fights on the black and white television on his family's small farm. He was a top amateur for several years, and became the only American fighter to win a gold medal in the 1964 Olympics in Tokyo despite fighting in the final bout with an injured left thumb.

"Joe Frazier should be remembered as one of the greatest fighters of all time and a real man," Arum told the AP in a telephone interview Monday night. "He's a guy that stood up for himself. He didn't compromise and always gave 100 percent in the ring. There was never a fight in the ring where Joe didn't give 100 percent."

After turning pro in 1965, Frazier quickly became known for his punching power, stopping his first 11 opponents. Within three years he was fighting world-class opposition and, in 1970, beat Ellis to win the heavyweight title that he would hold for more than two years.

A woman who answered Ellis' phone in Kentucky said the former champion suffers from Alzheimer's Disease, but she wanted to pass along the family's condolences.

In Philadelphia, a fellow Philadelphia fighter, longtime middleweight champion Bernard Hopkins, said Frazier was so big in the city that he should have his own statue, like the fictional Rocky character.

"I saw him at one of my car washes a few weeks ago. He was in a car, just hollering at us, 'They're trying to get me!' That was his, hi," Hopkins said. "I'm glad I got to see him in the last couple of months. At the end of the day, I respect the man. I believe at the end of his life, he was fighting to get that respect."

It was his fights with Ali that would define Frazier. Though Ali was gracious in defeat in the first fight, he was as vicious with his words as he was with his punches in promoting all three fights—and he never missed a chance to get a jab in at Frazier.

Frazier, who in his later years would have financial trouble and end up running a gym in his adopted hometown of Philadelphia, took the jabs personally. He felt Ali made fun of him by calling him names and said things that were not true just to get under his skin. Those feelings were only magnified as Ali went from being an icon in the ring to one of the most beloved people in the world.

After a trembling Ali lit the Olympic torch in 1996 in Atlanta, Frazier was asked by a reporter what he thought about it.

"They should have thrown him in," Frazier responded.

He mellowed, though, in recent years, preferring to remember the good from his fights with Ali rather than the bad. Just before the 40th anniversary of his win over Ali earlier this year—a day Frazier celebrated with parties in New York—he said he no longer felt any bitterness toward Ali, who suffers from Parkinson's Syndrome and is mostly mute.

"I forgive him," Frazier. "He's in a bad way."

Magic Johnson still beating HIV 20 years later

LOS ANGELES (AP)—If Magic Johnson had known just how well he could live with HIV, he wouldn't have retired from the Lakers on Nov. 7, 1991.

Johnson would never change what he did for the fight against the HIV/AIDS epidemic when he publicly revealed his diagnosis to a stunned world. His courage that day, along with two subsequent decades of vibrant living, forever altered attitudes about the virus and its effects.

Magic is simply glad the world knows such happy endings are possible with access to treatment and vigilance.

"At that time, it was the right decision," Johnson said Monday on the 20th anniversary of his stunning retirement. "If I knew what I knew today, that I could still play basketball and do my thing, I probably wouldn't have retired. But I'm a guy that doesn't have regrets. I don't look back. I'm happy, because I wanted to be here a long time. We made the right call at that time."

Johnson recognized the occasion at Staples Center on Monday with an upbeat celebration and a message of steadfastness. Dozens of politicians, celebrities and Lakers greats from Jerry West and Pat Riley to James Worthy and Michael Cooper joined Johnson and AIDS researcher David Ho for a luncheon, and the Magic Johnson Foundation announced a $1 million gift to continue its mission for worldwide HIV awareness and testing.

Two decades after his shocking admission and quick retirement at 32,

Johnson's doctors say he's a 52-year-old specimen of health, comfortably managing HIV with a daily regimen of drugs and exercise.

While he once took upwards of 15 pills several times a day, he now requires just a few daily medications. He rises around 5 a.m. each day for a vigorous workout—everything from stretching and running to Tae Bo—before spending his days overseeing his large business empire.

Yet Johnson worries his strong health could encourage complacency, and he sees the anniversary of his historic announcement as a call to renew dedication to the cause.

"I often say I'm good for the virus, and bad for it," Johnson said. "Good because I'm doing well, and that I can go out and try and raise the awareness level, get people to go get tested ... but on the flip side of that, people see that I'm doing well, so they've kind of relaxed on HIV and AIDS. People think that now if they get the virus, they'll do well, but a couple million will die this year."

While Johnson mostly remembers a feeling of confidence derived from the unflinching support of his wife, Cookie, on the day of his announcement, his fellow Lakers have no trouble recalling the shock and confusion they felt 20 years ago.

"It stunned me, and I think I was only semi-conscious," Lakers owner Jerry Buss said. "The whole day is just like a blur in my mind. I remember Kareem (Abdul-Jabbar) had to assist me. I don't think I had enough blood in the brain."

Worthy remembers the Lakers being sent from practice at Loyola Marymount to the Forum, with no idea why. The power forward wondered whether West was retiring from his executive job, or perhaps Johnson was seriously injured after missing the previous week of practice.

"When he announced, it was a reality check, because at that time, it could have been anybody," Worthy said. "A lot of people started to wonder about themselves, especially people who had never been tested before. ... He's taught us all a valuable lesson. Back in the early '90s, you thought it was a death (sentence). You thought it was over. To see him put meaning on a disease that only had one meaning, that was great."

Ho, a pioneering researcher who grew up in Los Angeles idolizing West and Elgin Baylor, said he met Johnson "on one of his darkest days" after his diagnosis. Ho has always been impressed by Johnson's upbeat willingness to acknowledge his condition, using himself to raise funds for research and treatment.

Ho also shot down the long-held suspicion that Johnson easily managed the virus because his wealth and celebrity gave him access to preferential treatment. Johnson's condition is "quite typical" at this point in the virus' treatment, he said.

"All of us working in the field are grateful to him and his foundation for doing so, because this is a plague that continues to rage," Ho said. "Because of therapeutic success, there is too much complacency in this country about this pandemic. We still need to develop new and better drugs. We have drugs that control HIV, but we don't have a cure, so research must continue."

Johnson famously couldn't stay away from basketball after his retirement, spreading the truth about HIV transmission to players and fans who sometimes balked at his participation. He was the MVP of the 1992 All-Star game and won a gold medal at the Barcelona Olympics before briefly coaching the Lakers in 1994 and returning to the court for 32 games in 1996, finally retiring in uniform.

Johnson is now a hugely successful businessman, a basketball commentator, a doting husband and a grandfather to his son Andre's two children. Yet he's still raising money and awareness, always working to create the same limitless future for others.

"The only problem is, I would be happier if the numbers in the black and brown communities would go down," Johnson said, citing the majority of each year's 60,000 new U.S. cases of HIV in minority communities. "There's been millions of people that have died since I announced 20 years ago, and so this is a bittersweet day. Yes, I'm living, but people are still getting this virus even as we speak. We must change the mindset, and we must do a better job educating those who live in urban America about this disease."

PHILADELPHIA (AP)—Matt Forte was standing on the sideline after losing two fumbles and Chicago faced a fourth-quarter deficit.

No problem for Jay Cutler and these resilient Bears.

Cutler threw a go-ahead 5-yard TD pass to Earl Bennett, Forte ran for 133 yards and the Bears rallied to beat the Philadelphia Eagles 30-24 on Monday night.

"We cannot afford to fall behind against anyone in this league, so we needed a good start," said Forte, who had 374 touches without losing a fumble.

"We had that, and even with that fast start, we still fell behind against that team. But we stayed focused and recovered. We tried not to worry about the past, and just focus on the next play. For us, that is the key."

It was a crushing loss for Michael Vick and the Eagles (3-5), who blew a fourth-quarter lead for the fourth time this season. Jeremy Maclin fell down and was tackled at the Chicago 30 after a 9-yard catch on fourth-and-10 with just under two min-

The defending NFC East champions trail the New York Giants (6-2) by three games.

"We need to keep getting better," Eagles coach Andy Reid said. "We have to continue to work hard and learn from our mistakes."

Chicago (5-3) won its third straight game, but remains third in the NFC North behind Green Bay (8-0) and Detroit (6-2). The Bears entered as an 8-point underdog despite coming off a bye.

After LeSean McCoy's 33-yard touchdown run following Forte's second fumble gave the Eagles a 24-17 lead in the third quarter, the Bears answered with 13 straight points.

Robbie Gould kicked a 38-yard field goal to cut it to 24-20, and then Chicago's defense forced a punt after three plays.

The Bears drove 51 yards for the go-ahead score, with Cutler tossing a 5-yard TD pass to Bennett over Asante Samuel for a 27-24 lead.

"All you ever hear is DeSean

Jackson and Jeremy Maclin and all of the plays that they can make," Bennett said of Philadelphia's standout receivers. "So, we just wanted to go out there, make some plays, and prove the critics wrong."

The Eagles reached the Bears 42 on their next drive. On fourth-and-6, punter Chas Henry bounced a pass to a wide-open Colt Anderson and Chicago took over.

Henry, recruited as a quarterback at Florida, spent a lot of time throwing passes to long snapper Jon Dorenbos on the sideline in the second quarter, presumably warming up for the fake punt. He got his chance and badly underthrew the pass.

"Pretty seldom do we have a guy completely uncovered and have a chance to make a big play. We didn't execute," Reid said.

The Bears took advantage. A pass interference penalty on Nnamdi Asomugha at the Eagles 7 prolonged the drive. The defense stiffened and Gould hit a 22-yarder to extend the lead to 30-24.

Trent Cole knocked the ball loose from Forte following a 6-yard run midway through the third quarter, and Mike Patterson recovered at the Bears 41. Forte was originally ruled down, but the play was overturned when the Eagles challenged.

Two plays later, McCoy sprinted down the left side and into the end zone to score for the eighth straight game, tying Hall of Famer Steve Van Buren's club record.

In a matchup featuring two of the game's best running backs, Forte outplayed McCoy except for the two fumbles.

McCoy had 71 yards rushing.

The Eagles tied it at 17 on Ronnie Brown's 4-yard TD run that capped an 80-yard drive to open the second half. The TD was Brown's first since joining the Eagles. Brown was one of six former Pro Bowl players acquired by Philadelphia in the offseason. He hadn't made much of a contribution and was traded to Detroit last month only to have the deal voided because Jerome Harrison didn't pass a physical.

The Bears took a 17-10 halftime lead on Marion Barber's 2-yard TD run after a costly fumble by Jackson.

Jackson, a Pro Bowl punt returner, was stripped by Corey Graham and the Bears recovered at the Eagles 9 with a minute left in the second quarter.

A roughing-the-passer penalty on Jason Babin gave Chicago a first down at the Eagles 2 after Cutler threw an incomplete pass on third down. Barber then ran in from the 2.

Cutler threw a 5-yard TD pass to Matt Spaeth and Gould kicked a 51-yard field goal to help the Bears build an early 10-0 advantage.

Rookie Alex Henery kicked a career-best 47-yard field goal for the Eagles, and the defense made a big play on Chicago's ensuing series late in the second quarter.

Forte caught a short pass from Cutler, but Brian Rolle punched the ball out. Rolle picked it up and ran 22 yards for a TD that tied it at 10.

After struggling badly against the run the first five weeks, the Eagles improved in the past two games. They allowed just 127 yards rushing combined in wins against Washington and Dallas.

Helped by a pass interference call on Major Wright that kept their second drive going, the Eagles reached the Bears 19 early in the second quarter. But Vick made a poor throw into double coverage that was picked off by Wright, who returned it 36 yards to the Bears 48.

The teams met for the fifth straight year. Chicago has won four of those games. Beloved former Eagles coach Buddy Ryan was honored at halftime.

Vick was 21 of 38 for 213 yards and one interception. He fell to 0-4 as a starter against the Bears.

Cutler was 18 of 32 for 208 yards and two TDs.

Ryan, who is battling cancer, was Chicago's defensive coordinator during their Super Bowl championship season in 1985. He came to Philadelphia the next season and led the Eagles to the playoffs from 1988-90.

Ryan got a loud ovation and fans chanted "Buddy! Buddy!"

GCA completes undefeated run in boys volleyball

The Grace Christian Academy Eagles capped a perfect 12-0 season as the Marianas Interscholastic Sports Organization's boys volleyball regular season came to a close Monday at the the Marianas High School Gymnasium.

GCA swept the Saipan Southern High School Manta Rays in all three sets, 25-16, 25-16, and 15-12.

GCA received a bye in the double-elimination postseason tournament with the win, while SSHS finished the year in sixth place with a 3-9 win-loss record.

The tournament's playoffs is set to run from Nov. 16 to 17. Wednesday's games will be held at the MHS gym and start at 3pm, while Thursday's matches tip off at 4pm at the Northern Marianas College Gymnasium.

Meanwhile, the Kagman High School Ayuyus finished the regular season on a high note, downing the MHS QT's in a tiebreaker match for third place in the standings.

In the tiebreaker, KHS took the opening set, 25-20, but the QT's regrouped and won the second set, 25-19, to force a deciding final set.

In the end, KHS buckled down to work in the clutch to get the nod, 15-11, and along with it the second seed in the playoffs.

KHS finished with a 7-5 slate, while the QT's (6-6) settled for a fourth place seat in the tourney.

Other competing teams include second-ranked Saipan International School Geckos (10-2), fifth-ranked MHS Awesome Fins (4-8), and seventh-place MHS KFC Fins (0-12).

last year's finals in three sets, pulling off a come-from-behind win after losing the first set. GCA lost the championship and had its six-year reign in the varsity ending despite sweeping the regular season and beating SIS twice.

The Eagles faltered on their bid to clinch their seventh straight championship, as they played safe in the last two sets after a strong showing in the opening set. The bitter memory of that sorry loss was still vivid on GCA coach Becky Robles' mind and she reminded her players to play solid games in two or three sets to avoid another collapse.

"Against SIS, we have to play heads up volleyball right at the very beginning of the match. We have to be confident, but not too confident. SIS is a strong team and we have to be consistent with our game to win this time," said Robles, who gathered her players right after the win over CCA and told them to attend today's practice in preparation for the do-or-die finals tomorrow.

The Eagles had an easier time against Calvary in the first set of the second semis match, as James Libut, Angelo Salas, and Dae Min Jeon teamed up in the frontline to lift GCA to a 10-point win. Other members of the team are Khemner Sugue, Jun Kitagawa, Anthony Borja, Romar Bulong, Ira Batallones, Jazmin Rayphand, Julie Muna, Zena Demapan, Michiko Tenorio, and Chrystal Cristobal.

In the second set, Robles decided to field her second and third stringers and Calvary capitalized on the absence of Jeon and Libut to take control of the game. The Sharks managed to lead by as much as three points, 11-8 and 18-15, forcing GCA to call two timeouts early.

Jeon and other GCA starters returned midway in the second set, but despite their presence, Calvary still played steady and led for the last time at 19-18, off Salas' wide return.

Jeon then went for a kill to tie the game and the match was still in a stalemate, 20-all, after GCA committed a service error in the ensuing play.

Salas made up for his earlier booboo after blocking a spike from Calvary to put GCA ahead, 21-20 and then Jeon followed it up with back-to-back kills to move the Eagles within two points from winning the semis tiff.

GCA made it a 24-20 tally when Calvary was called for an error at the net and the Eagles wrapped up the game with Jeon setting up Libut for a spike.

Balls of Fury topped IDK in Week 3, 37-29; Alpha Q downed Dream Team, 33-27; Just-do-it outclassed Geeks, 27-17; and Roc It slipped past Lay Low, 32-26. Geeks' lone victory came from a 30-17 trashing of the G-Sparks in Week 2, while Roc It and Give-a-Hoot also won over Just-do-It, 37-29, and Lay Low, 36-28, respectively, in the second round. Dream Team gained a share of the No. 2 spot with a 29-24 triumph over Balls of Fury in Week 2.

Meanwhile, Damart Teregeyo of Give-a-Hoot became the first "master blaster" of the fall season. A player earns the master blaster tag if he has scored at least one ace, xunk, jam, kee, and goal. Teregeyo has tallied five xunks, five aces, two kees, one goal, and one jam.

In other individual statistics, Teachers' Tyce Mister has scored the most jams with two. A jam is made when a player intercepted a low serve and spiked it down to the opposing team's court untouched. In the service and xunks categories, The Geeks' Jonathan Ignacio is ahead with eight and three, respectively. Nick Gross of the Teachers leads the league in kees with seven, while Lay Low's Icemar Somorang has scored the most goals so far with three. A goal is scored when the attacking teams hits the ball and it went in to the soccer goal located past the backline.

Manalili, Krizelle Alfloreza, Alodia Lumasag, and Clarisse Cayabyab scored one goal each for Tan Holdings.

In other results in the non-competitive division last week, Matansa topped Shirley's, 3-1, while MHS and MP United 2 drew their match, 2-2. Levita Cho, Luz Phan, and Becky Robles logged one goal each for Matansa, while Lily Williams was the only player to score for Shirley's. In the MHS-MP United 2 tussle, Zapanta recorded twin goals, while Jaime Borja also made a pair to force a draw.

6:30pm and the non-competitive squads seeing action at 5:30pm and 7:30pm matches.

Results in last week's competitive division had Paire winning over Independents, 3-1. Megan Herber canned twin goals for Paire, which was credited with another goal off the miscue of Independents goalie Cathy Perry. Pratoon Staffer scored the two goals for Independents.

Independents also played last Monday and bowed to Shirley's FC. Lalaine Pagarao made the lone goal in the game.

For the non-competitive games results, sister teams MP United 1 and 2 collided last Monday with the former prevailing, 4-1, while Paire edged MHS, 1-0.

Akane Imaya, Mel Demapan, Julien Estopado, and Lydia Tan converted one goal apiece for MP United 1, while Laarni Zapanta scored the only goal for MP United 2.

In the Paire-MHS tiff, Temary

Gramlich made it to the scoreboard to give Paire the win.

The victory was Paire's third, as it notched two wins in the opening week of the fall league. In the opener on Oct. 31, Paire downed Independents, 1-0, with Gramlich also scoring the only goal for the winning squad. In their second game on Nov. 3, it was Maria Ornes' turn to lift Paire to a 1-0 triumph over Tan Holdings FC.

Before losing to Paire, Tan Holdings had a rousing debut in the fall league after shutting out MP United 1, 4-0. Lina

Joey Dela Cruz and Ned Norita earned Ace of the Month honors after the conclusion of the X-Clusive Golf Association's recent October and November events

Norita was crowned the November Ace in last Saturday's event held at the Kingfisher Golf Links.

Norita hit the turn a stroke under par (35) and finished the back with a 42 for a 77 gross. His 7-handicap adjusted to a field low 70 net score.

John Reyes posted a 44 on the front to go with a 42 on the back for an 86 gross count, and while his 16-handicap gave him a 70 net tally, he settled for second place. Reyes was out of the running anyways as he won April Ace honors earlier in the season.

Meanwhile, Park Yong started out with a 43 on the front nine and finished with a 46 on the backside to scratch an 89 gross card and finished third place with a net 71.

In addition, November's closest to the pin winners included Dung Tenorio on hole No. 3, Jerry Ayuyu on hole No. 12, while Tony Benavente Jr. took holes No. 7 and 14.

Back in October, Dela Cruz hit the turn at 2 over par (38) and managed a 41 on the back nine for a gross score of 79. His 12-handicap adjusted out to a 67 net score.

Dela Cruz ended up topping the field, three strokes ahead of Benavente Jr., who grossed an even 80 before the handicap adjustment.

Gerald Guerrero took a 42 on the front and finished the back with a 45 for a gross 87 that worked out into a 71 net score, good for third place.

October's closest to the pin winners include Yasu Irinaka on hole No. 6, J.J. Atalig on hole No. 12, and Benavente Jr. on holes No. 8 and 15.

Next month XGA will combine the December Ace tourney with the season-ending Ace of Aces tournament. The venue and event date are still pending.
